Perhaps the most wonderful thing about such a house is its cost. The five-room bungalow type can be built, with all mechanical equipment, for only about $3,800; the scale is graduated to two-story affairs which cost less than $10,000.

The advent of pre-fabricated, motorized houses at lost cost may, or may not, have an immediate noticeable effect upon the building industry. Mr. Gunnison thinks it will.

"They will open up an immediate market for hundreds of thousands of homes, create a demand for much labor in the building trades, stimulate the buying and production of materials and make modern, economical and proper housing available to hundreds of thousands of families now anxious to own their own homes, but financially unable to do so because of prices far beyond the reach of their reduced incomes," he said.

Likened to Automobile.

"The application of modern industrial methods to the framework of our antiquated building practices, their inherent economies, mass production and buying of materials and equipment have been correlated in production of the motorized home so that it has been brought to the same high plane of scientific design, engineering perfection, mechanical efficiency and economical production that removed the automobile from the 'millionaire's plaything' class of less than twenty years ago to make it standard and very necessary equipment of almost every American family."

It must be remembered that Mr. Gunnison's Houses, Inc., is not engaged in the manufacture or sale of houses of this type, but is merely conducting research, in an effort to show how better low-cost houses can be built. The motive is not altogether altrustic, of course, for Houses, Inc., is subsidized by General Electric and is assisted by American Radiator and Sanitary, both of whom will have plenty to sell when the pre-fabricated, motorized house becomes the general thing. But the work, in merit and in interest to you and me, is worthy of publicity, in the opinion of this writer.

Meanwhile, building is on the upturn. Picking key cities, it is up 100 per cent for August of this year over last in Boston; 24 per cent in New York; 14 per cent in Philadelphia; 234 per cent in Pittsburgh; 990 per cent in Atlanta; 110 per cent in Chicago; 315 per cent in Kansas City, Mo.; 210 per cent in Memphis; 255 per cent in Fort Worth; 88 per cent in Denver; 180 per cent in Los Angeles, and 135 per cent in San Francisco.

On the recent Better Housing day celebrated throughout the nation, 3,500 new and better homes were started on a single morning. Conferences are being held at important cities throughout the world in efforts of many nations to help their people build homes.

TOO LATE—ALMOST

By B. A. BENEDICT

© Associated Newspapers. WNU Service.

WHEN a girl reaches nineteen she has every right to feel that she is grown up. But Mariel Priest's mother and father (especially the latter) didn't share this feeling. For example, Mr. Priest still clung to the idea that he should meet and approve of every young man who wished to take his daughter out. It made Mariel feel silly, but after all a bed of roses is a bed of roses, especially when times are hard, and as yet she hadn't met any young man who was worth risking a rebellion over.

That is, she hadn't met any one before Gill Sheldon came along. And then she didn't know it until it was too late—almost.

She met Gill at a dance at the country club. He was down from Boston visiting the Nevilles at their summer place. Mariel was attracted to him because she liked the sound of his voice. (He had a Harvard accent). And when after cutting in on her seven times, he asked if he might take her dancing next Thursday night, she laughingly assented. Already she had begun to discover that young Mr. Sheldon had something besides a Harvard accent.

But she didn't decide definitely that it was young Mr. Sheldon himself, and not the sound of his voice at all, that she liked until he called for her Thursday night. When she came downstairs Gill and her father were sitting in the library. And that's all they were doing: sitting. Mr. Priest had settled his horn-rimmed glasses on his nose, (which he always did when one of Mariel's new young men were under scrutiny), and was glaring. Young Mr. Sheldon was glaring back, but there was a smile on his face. It occurred to Mariel that there was something about that smile that wasn't just right.

She entered the library, unseen, and was on the point of announcing herself when her father said in a not too gentle voice: "Well, young man, why don't you say something? You've sat there like a bump on a log ever since I came into this room."

"The Reason I Haven't Said Anything, Old Man," He Replied, "Is Because It Isn't My Place to Make Conversation."

Gill's smile grew more unattractive. "The reason I haven't said anything, old man," he replied, "is because it isn't my place to make conversation. I'm the guest here and you're the host. Yet apparently you expect me to do the entertaining. It's quite obvious, sir, you have neither manners nor breeding, nothing but a lot of shriveled up ideas like meeting and approving of your daughter's suitors. I've heard about you, but I wouldn't believe it—until now."

It was in that moment that Mariel decided Mr. Gill Sheldon had something much more likeable than a Harvard accent. She almost swooned with shock, but she knew she liked him.

Mr. Priest was slowly strangling in his chair. In fact, Gill had risen and almost reached the door before the old man got himself under control. And then the words he uttered didn't make sense; he sounded like one in whose throat an olive had become stuck.

Mariel turned and made a quick exit the way she had come, and when Gill reached the street he found her waiting there for him.

"Hello," he said. "You'd better go back. Your pop doesn't approve of me."

"So what?" said Mariel.

Gill frowned. "I insulted him," he explained patiently.

"And you did a nice job of it," Mariel complimented.

Young Mr. Sheldon scowled at her. Presently he said: "Hop in and let's go to the dance." And Mariel smiled and hopped in. Before the dance was over she succeeded in completely overcoming the faint misgivings that thoughts of her father aroused, and instead was conscious only of a sweet new sensation of happiness. Hours later she interpreted the sensation, or rather confessed it. She was in love. Completely and permanently. Following the confession came the usual reaction: Did Gill Sheldon love her? What if he despised her because of her father? What if he went away and left her alone? What if she never saw him again?

Mariel didn't sleep much that night. The next day she drove over to the Burdons'. The Burdons lived next door to the Nevilles, where Gill was staying. Her artifice was rewarded when Gill himself came along the path through the trees and smiled at her pleasantly. He sat down beside her on the screened-in porch and stayed till dinner time. Mariel was afraid he was going back without asking for a date. But he didn't. He wanted know if she would go driving w him Saturday. He said he'd meet h at the post office, and grinned-me ingly.

So they went driving Saturday a canoeing Sunday and to the movies M day and dancing on Wednesday. time they met at the post office, a neither of them mentioned her fath On the following Saturday, Gill t her he was going back to Boston. riel caught her breath and waited.

"I wish you'd come up some ti and spend a week-end with us," said. "You'd like my folks."

"Oh, I know I would. And I'd lo to come."

Gill cleared his throat. "I hate derhanded business. Your father wou never approve of your coming—if knew."

"He'd probably disown me," Mari agreed.

"And still you want to come?"

She nodded. Gill sucked in breath. "If he disowned you, wh would you do?"

"I don't know," said Mariel.

"But still you'd come?"

"Still," said Mariel.

Gill frowned, thinking deeply. "M riel," he said after a moment, "this all my fault. I—I—" He turned to h suddenly. "There's one way out. If got married, your father—eventua he'd probably get used to me."

"Probably," said Mariel, "he wou Now there remains only the matter you and I falling in love."

"In love!" Gill stared at her in tonishment. "Why, good heavens, been in love with you since that fi night we met. Do you think for a sing minute I'd consider taking on a ther-in-law like your dad if I were in love?"

"And do you think I'd tolerate man who insulted my father if I did love him?" said Mariel.

And that night, for the first tim Mariel insisted that Gill drive h home and come inside for a minut Gill complied with a dubious expre sion on his face, an expression th turned to misgivings when he fou Mr. Priest waiting for them. Misgi ings gave way to astonishment wh the old man beamed at him and e tended his hand.

"My boy, congratulations! You the first young man to call on daughter who's displayed more bac bone than a jelly fish!"

Mariel beamed, and Gill felt though he'd been struck. He didn't it at all, not even when she explain that she wanted to make sure he lov her in spite of her father, and wa ed him to know that she loved him spite of his insults. Artifice she cal it. But Gill only nodded and smiled a blank sort of way. It seemed to h that every one had gone to a lot trouble to bring about a happy en ing. For, in spite of everything, was happy and quite content.

Tobacco Industry Recalls Canada's Early Strug

The history of tobacco growing Canada reaches back to the ea French Colonial days. The Fren settlers on the banks of the St. La rence found the custom of toba smoking was general among the n tives, but, partly owing to governme al opposition, the white populati did not acquire the habit quickly. deed, several years passed before far ers began to grow the plant.

It was not until about 1735 that t government gave any encouragem to tobacco growing. With the sett ment of what is now Ontario, the bacco area was extended, and it probable that the Loyalists who ca to Canada after the American Re lution of 1775 brought seed from t tobacco districts in the South. Th are records of shipments of toba from Essex county, Ontario, shor after the war of 1812-14, the leaf ing sent down the Mississippi to N Orleans. Four years after Confed ation, the first decennial census show that 399,870 pounds of tobacco w grown in Ontario, and 1,195,345 pou in Quebec. From then onward, p duction expanded and reached its pe in 1932 with a total crop of 54,000,0 pounds.

Tobacco growing in Canada pl an important part in agricultural p duction. There are five general typ of tobacco grown, namely, flue-cur burley, dark, Quebec pipe and cig For each of these types are grown t to fifty varieties and strains.

The division of the Dominion periment farms renders assistance the development of Canadian toba along economic lines, carrying on tive research on problems of fertili and soils, breeding, selection and sta ardization of varieties, cultural me ods, curing and fermentation, disea and insects, marketing, exhibitions educational work.

Color of Catfish

As in structure, the color of t common catfish is decidedly variab While it is usually a dark yellowis brown, more or less clouded, it vari from yellowish to nearly black and sometimes marbled or blotched. Wh first hatched, it is a delicate pink, a as the egg-sack is absorbed, becom quite black, with the barbels of being white, these usually becom darker as the fish grows older. T throat and belly-region are usually dirty yellowish-white.

Napoleon Encouraged Beet Cul

In 1811 Napoleon Bonaparte, learning that the culture of beets proved the soil, appropriated 1,000,0 francs to encourage the industry wh he created by imperial decree. In t years he induced the erection of beet sugar factories.

From this point, one may look into the crystal of the 1936 campaign and it takes no stretch of the imagination to visualize what a pounding the New Deal opposition will give the Roosevelt administration on this question of spending.

When Mr. Roosevelt began spending, he declared it was justified because hundreds of thousands of citizens were starving. His next pronouncement on this subject by way of explaining continued expenditure was that if the government spent freely, it would serve as a priming of the economic pump; that the circulation of federal money would allow industry to sell and that industry would replace by manufacture the things sold. That, too, brought little or no result. Then we entered the current stage where the spending was to be closely supervised and only projects that held promise of actually developing manufacture and retail selling would be approved and financed by federal money. It is regrettable but it is a fact that almost nothing has come of this program.

And to make matters worse, lately, Secretary Ickes, public works administrator, and Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins have locked horns on the bulk of the projects on which federal money was to be used.

It is not strange that these two men should differ. Mr. Hopkins, being a trained, a professional, welfare worker, sees things only from the standpoint of the individual who needs food. Mr. Ickes has a conception of federal spending that embraces the use of money in ways designed to start the great industries in motion. He figures that if these industries get going, they will employ workers; the workers will spend their wages and the retailers will profit thereby and, as the retailers sell from their shelves, they seek replacements from the manufacturers. The controversy between Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes, therefore, is not one to be settled by compromise or by soft words. In fact, it may never be settled until one or the other gets out of his place in the government.

The importance of the Ickes-Hopkins row to the reader of this column, however, lies largely in the fact that the particular reader is a taxpayer. The connection is simply this: the last congress appropriated $4,880,000,000 for use by the administration in public works and relief. If all of that sum were spent the public debt would be increased by that amount because internal revenue taxes are insufficient to offset more than the ordinary government expenditures. Therefore, if all of this money is not spent, and it cannot be spent if the Ickes-Hopkins dispute continues to hold back administration plans, then the taxpayers will have just that much less of a government debt to meet through this payment of their taxes.

Break for Taxpayers

So the President's order placing all administrative agencies under the general accounting office to see that their spending is honestly done and the developments within the administration over a difference in policy must be taken together as a break for the taxpayer.

Agriculture adjustment administration officials are about ready to present to the farmers of this country a detailed plan for control of potato production. It will provide means for boosting the incomes of the potato farmers something more than 100 per cent, and will increase the cost of this item of food to consumers by a proportionate amount, of course. Conferences soon will be held between the AAA and representatives of farmers' organizations to work out phases of the plan reqpiring farmer approval.

Potato Control

Various thoughts arise if one reflects upon potato control. First, control of potato production marks the fourteenth agricultural crop brought under regimentation and it presents, probably, the toughest of all of them in the matter of enforcing its provisions.

Adoption of the potato control program represents attainment of a point in the life of the AAA where one step has led to another until control of potatoes was essential, or the whole plan of crop control flops. It will be recalled that the declared purpose of the AAA at the beginning was only for the control of cotton. Land withheld from cotton then was planted to tobacco and tobacco had to be controlled; when tobacco was controlled, and the land withdrawn, farmers in some sections turned to peanuts and peanuts had to be controlled.

I understand the AAA is considerably worried about the job of enforcing the potato control law. That law provides compulsion against overproduction in the form of a tax club—a tax of 45 cents a bushel. In addition, there are penalties of an amazingly severe kind—$1,000 fine for the first offense and imprisonment for not more than a year for the second.

EGG IMPROVEMENT THROUGH BREEDING

Color Affected by Feeding, Authority Says.

By J. H. Vondell, Poultry Department, Massachusetts State College. WNU Service.

The greatest improvement in egg quality in the future will come about through breeding. Many of the different factors affecting quality of eggs are controlled or at least strongly affected, by breeding. Feeding probably is the second factor affecting egg quality.

While poultrymen and egg dealers judge quality in eggs by candling, the homemaker judges the eggs by their appearance, odor, and flavor after they are broken. The yolk should be upstanding and should be surrounded by a well defined mass of thick albumen, or "white."

Some hens inherit a tendency to lay eggs with watery whites, and this does not seem to be affected by feeding. The feed seems to have no influence on the amount of thick albumen in the egg or on watery whites.

In eggs with watery whites the yolks usually are weak and do not stand up when the eggs are broken into a plate. This, too, is influenced by heredity, rather than feed. Only by careful selection of breeding stock, to avoid birds which produce eggs with watery whites, can the fault be eliminated.

Some hens occasionally lay eggs which have a fishy smell. While all the facts are not known, this characteristic, too, seems to be inherited.

One thing which is definitely known to be affected by feeding is the color of the yolk, although this, too, is influenced by heredity to some extent. Pale yolks of relatively uniform color may be produced by feeding the birds an all-mash ration, while colorless yolks will be produced if the birds are given a feed entirely lacking in the yellow pigment found in the yolks. Green and yellow feeds increase the amount of yellow color in the eggs.

Easy to Distinguish Sex of Chicks at Early Age

It is comparatively easy to distinguish the males in the light poultry breeds, the comb and tail being a reliable sign at a very early age; but in the case of the heavy breeds more care is needed for accurate sexing. Batches of chicks of the same age and breed should be handled separately, says a writer in the Montreal Herald.

At four weeks the feathering is a valuable guide, that of the pullets being more profuse than that of the males, which are bare on the back and shoulders. From five to six weeks, feathering will still help, but should be checked with other points. The male chicks are cobbier, longer in the legs, and generally deeper in the body than are the pullets. The skull is broader and the eye bolder, while the body is carried at an angle. The pullet's head is smaller and narrower, and the body longer from head to tail, and usually carried parallel to the ground.

Most heavy-breed pullets sport a tail from about seven days of age, while in many strains the cockerels show no signs of this for six weeks. The feathers in the saddle hackle of the male are longer, narrower, and more pointed than in the pullets.

Wire Platforms for Waterers

Poultrymen will find it profitable to provide a small wire platform for the water fountain. Such an arrangement will help keep down worms and disease, for around the water fountain where the ground is moist is an ideal place for parasites and disease germs to multiply. A simple square frame can be made of ten-inch boards, large enough so that pullets must stand upon it while drinking, and covered with one-inch hardware cloth of heavy guage poultry netting. The frame should be braced with crosspieces so as to give the wire support and to support the water fountain in the center of the frame. It will pay also to provide another platform for the hoppers where waste feed will not be picked up by the pullets out of droppings and filth.—Missouri Farmer.

In the Poultry Yard

Fresh eggs become stale in a day or two of hot weather.

Forty out of every one hundred eggs set fail to hatch, according to good authorities.

Young chicks require a little more hard grain than older ones; that is, they should have it fed to them oftener. Later they will have learned to satisfy their desires from the mash hoppers.

Eggs must be gathered several times in hot weather and stored in a cool place where there are no objectionable odors for them to absorb.

On the E. C. Schneider farm in Waller county, Texas, 270 White Leghorn hens paid their own board bill and bought feed for four work horses.

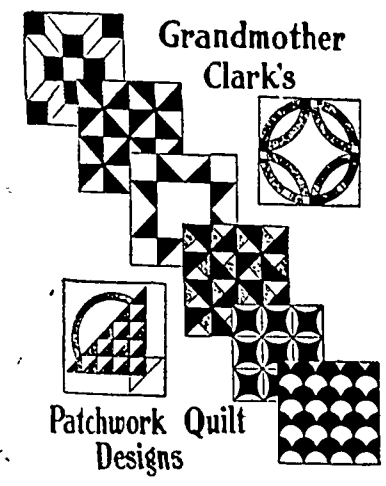
Frozen eggs imported into the United States from China in 1934 amounted to 59,744 pounds, valued at $4,996, and 392,562 pounds of frozen egg yolks valued at $29,350.

Old Fashioned Patchwork Quilts



By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

From all indications quilt makers will be busy this winter making more quilts. Quilts are still very attractive for needle workers, and any suggestion on this work will be welcomed.

Patchwork Quilt making is much easier today than during Colonial days. Patches are more easily obtained. Diagrams and cutouts for patches and books of instruction are printed. All of these make the work easier and more quilts are being made.

Grandmother Clark's Book No. 20 on Patchwork Quilts contains 30 quilts with cutting diagram for patches, also several ways to assemble 12 and 18-inch quilt blocks.

This book contains information and diagrams for the quilts shown above and many other old designs. Send us 15 cents for this book No. 20 and receive it by mail.

Dynamite

In Fort Myers, Fla., O. J. Hall, fifty-one, superintendent of a light and power company, placed a stick of dynamite in his mouth and lighted the fuse. It blew his head to bits.

In Estherville, Iowa, Burt Bloom, sixty, retired farmer, placed dynamite in a rock bed, lighted a fuse and stood back. Nothing happened. Bloom waited. At last he cautiously approached the charge. As he bent over the dynamite exploded and killed him.

CHECK YOUR RECORD

Put yourself on the witness stand and cross-examine to see if you are strictly obeying the laws of hygiene. You know what they emphasize: nourishing food, sleep, sunlight, good elimination, exercise, healthy fun, even temper. If you pick listlessly at good simple meals but empty the pickle dish, you know one reason why your complexion has lost its bloom.

If you not only take two helpings of everything at table but never miss a chance at candy, salted nuts, sodas, or between-meal snacks, your face is a plain warning to reform your eating habits.

If you fret and stew about what people think of you and constantly expect things to go wrong, pull yourself together and train your mind to be easy and your heart to be light. You may not think that brooding over a fancied slight or flaring up at the family's tactless teasing adversely affects your complexion. But it does! ing Harry" Will Move Convention From Britt

REDTH HARRY, EX-KING OBOS, CALLED AT TIMES FICE LAST WEDNESDAY

Campaigning To Again Set Himself Up As "King"

bredth Harry, ex-king of the a familiar character in this Iowa, paid Klemme a visit ednesday and called at the Office. He is endeavoring to the help of the newspapers in gning for him to again set up as "King of the Hobos" will be remembered that at cent Hobo Convention held at that the bums elected Scoop- Scotty McDoodle as their Harry claims the convention ooked, and so now he is with- kingdom or a crown.

the meantime the Civic Club lemme may be overlooking a bet by not contacting Hair- h Harry and convince him to his flock here. Oh, yeah?

Harry's Letter Printed

ollowing is the letter Hair h Harry wrote and which he s to the Associated Press:

Associated Press
Klemme Times

y book "Old Inner Tubes Comes n," published by the Chamber Commerce, Belvidere, Ill., says objectives are three in number. to change the name of roast and roast pork to 365; second hange the name of humanity to manity; third, to see the py- ds and then die with a smile. now a fourth objective is forc- upon me, and that is moving Hobo Convention from Britt.

an open letter to the Associa- Press asking bids for the con- ion is my first move.

have told the committee if they ld hold the election at ten o'- k I would hold the next con- ion in Forest City. They ignor- me saying the convention was ovable as the mountains, that e was something about the graphical features that favored t. But I told them that I was bredth Harry, King of the e, poet, prophet, bard, sage and , author of the book "Old Inner es Comes Clean," and broadcast , and I thought I could move it. Money flowed like water in the election and five dollars a vote was offered, and turned down by one man who said he would vote for old Blood Poison. His name is Dust Rhodes from Sioux Rapids, and I hereby make him a prince and heir to the throne.

King Hairbredth Harry sandled feet will never again trod the street of Britt, or his sleeveless shirt cast a shadow in the sun. His convention plans have not yet fully matured, will cast a shadow of gloom over the city. Their bigger and better convention plans wil be foiled. Ingratitude is written all over the city and the election stench still hover over the town.

Scoop Shovel Scotty may be a better cook, or play a better tune on a lamp post, but I could pull more people to a convention than he could in a life time, for in the danguage of the song:

"Hairbredth Harry, the genial songster and chaser of human woes

"And the people flock together wherever Hairbredth Harry goes.

"But with Scoop Shovel Scotty They go the other way."

Scoop Shovel Scototy may preside at Britt to a few thousand people, pound on the lamp post and parade with his faked hobo queen but somewhere I will preside, make a speech and parade with my fair real queen, with fifty thousand people to cheer.

To Scoop Shovel Scotty I say if he wants to live he wants to lay off of me, that if he jumps on me as he has threatened to do you will tune a harp instead of a shovel.

To the Britt Committee I say if they will take the star off the officer who treated me rough and take that silver crown off Scotty McDoodle's bald head and put it on Hairbredth Harry's blond head and two hundred dollars in his hand and take that silver crown off the fake Queen of the Hobos and put it on my fair Queen's head, and apologize, we will shake hands and forget the past, and I'll go back to my first love and boost for Britt. If not then the fight is on, my decks are cleared for action. I ask or give no quarters; they bit the hand that fed them and incurred the wrath of King Hairbredth Harry, meek and humble and just, and the Golden Rule Monarch is out to get their goat

Scoop Shovel Scotty charges me with every crime in the calendar and says that I am a cannibal of the first order, but with all of his charges no jail sentence is staring me in the face, no one but him is threatening me with violence, the farms have not been destroyed, but government at Washington still lives, and Hairbredth Harry has done no harm.

I'm not unmindful of my friends in Britt; the children who get a kick out of the celebration, but I must deal with those in the saddle. I'll make Britt the wide spot in the road that it was before I boosted it, the little country town dreaming on the prairie where they play ball on the Main Street and dogs bark at strangers.

To all parties interested write me at Britt including those who have read my book "Old Inner Tubes Comes Clean" and send me a word of cheer. I'll hand you fifty thousand people on a platter with no guarantees asked if only I can have your love at a spot designated by me whether cross road, or metropolis, prairie or plain, mountain or desert, it makes no difference, if only I am there. Having behind me the bundle stiff, the depression stiff, and the hoboes everywhere, we will say to the Britt committee, you shall not press down on the brow of Scotty McDoodle that silver crown or crucify King Hairbredth Harry upon a cross of gold.

Signed,
Hairbredth Harry
King of the Bums

On This Younger Generation

o o

It seems to me there's quite a lot
Of Simply rot and polyglot
About the modern damoselles
Who flit about like gay gazelles.
It's very strange (so I've been told)
That modern girls could be so bold
They never were (I've heard folks say)
In Grandma's day.

It seems to me that I've heard tales
Of grandma blazing wagon trails,
Of carrying guns and hunting knives,
And fighting wars wih Indian tribes.
Now what could be more tom-boy-ish,
More bold and brave and hoydenish?
But still our parents don't profess
To love her less.

It's strange that girls in history
Were more sedate than girls like me
When "all your children," scienec states,
"Do share their parents' dominant traits."
Now, parents dear, if you are wise,
You will not stoop to criticise
Those traits that, very clearly too,
Belonged to you.

Iowa Fish & Game Commission Announces Pheasant Dates

PATTON SUGGESTS TWELVE SAFE DRIVING RULES.

Chief E. J. Patton, president of the Iowa Association of Chiefs of Police, has suggested 12 rules for safe driving and is having them printed and distributed in the prevention of motor accidents, which have been increasing each year.

Although the rules Chief Patton has selected are simple they are big in scope and easy to follow. The rules are:

1. Courtesy comes first. Consider the rights of others.
2 Keep your mind on your driving, and anticipate sudden emergencies.
3. Learn the "feel" of having your car under control.
4. Obey all traffic and parking regulations.
5. Keep to the right and comply with road markings and signs.
6. Signal for stops and turns—watch the car ahead.
7. Slow down at crossings, school and dangerous places.
8. Never pass cars on hills, ourves or crossings.
9. Adapt your driving to road conditions—rain, ice, soft spots and ruts.
10. It doesn't pay to take the "right of way" too seriously.
11. When you drive, remember the times when you're a pedestrian.
12. Know the law. It was passed for your protection.

NOV. 20 TO NOV.26 ARE OPEN DATES IN 37 COUNTIES

The Iowa conservation commission in charge of state parks and fish and game Tuesday announced Nov. 20 to Nov. 26, inclusive, as the definite dates for the 1935 open season on pheasants in 37 counties.

The commission set the legal shooting time on those days from 12 o'clock noon until 5 p. m. and the daily bag limit at three pheasants, only one of which may be a hen pheasant.

Possession Limit

Possession limit was set at six pheasants, of which only two may be hens.

Counties in which pheasant hunting will be permitted were decided upon after the commission held a series of local meetings to determine sentiment.

The pheasant season is limited to the following counties and parts of counties:

All of the following counties: Lyon, Osceola, Dickinson, Emmet, Winnebago, O'Brien, Sioux, Clay, Palo Alto, Kossuth Hancock, Floyd Worth, Mitchell, Cerro Gordo, Butler, Grundy, Winneshiek, Wright Humboldt, Pocahontas, Buena Vista, Cherokee, Plymouth, Woodbury Ida, Sac, Calhoun, Howard, Chickasaw, Bremer and Fayette.

Also those portions of Monona, Harrison and Pottawattamie counties west of federal highway 75.

Also those portions of Pottawattamie, Mills and Fremont west of federal highway 275.

IOWA FARMERS PREPARE TO PRODUCE MORE HOGS

Danger Is That Expansion Program May Be Overdone

Iowa farmers are enlarging their hog houses, building new farrowing pens and getting ready to grow more hogs, asserts the October issue of Agricultural Economic Facts Iowa State College Extension Circular.

"The danger in the situation is that farmers will overdo this expansion proposition," says the circular. "We need more hogs in this country than we have right now, even with the foreign hog markets practically gone—but we may have considerably more than we need a year from now.

Production Changing Rapidly

"One year is often enough to change from a small supply of hogs to a large supply. This year we are witnessing just such a rapid change in production.

"For about two years now the Iowa corn-hog ratio has been below normal—it has been less profitable to feed corn to hogs than to sell it for cash or use it in other enterprises. But now the situation has changed. Corn has gone down in price due to prospects for a good corn crop this fall and hog values have risen sharply. The ratio (based on Iowa prices) has widened to above 14, which means that 100 pounds of live hog is worth more than 14 bushels of corn.

"The pressure to go—into hog production is going to be irresistible if this wide ratio continues for several months—and there is nothing to indicate it won't.

Hog Marketings to Be Light

"The improvement in the relationship between corn and hog prices will probably lead to feeding to heavier weights," the circular continues. "This may tend to hold back hogs that would ordinarily appear on the market in the next few months and prevent part of the usual seasonal increase in slaughter supplies. This, together with improving demand conditions for meat, indicates that hog prices will probably not decline as much as they ordinarily do from October to December and may not decline at all.

"Hog slaughter during the next 7 months will probably total around 20 to 20 per cent less than in the same period last year when marketings were extremely high. Not only are hog marketings going to be very light this winter and spring, but supplies of pork and lard in storage are lighter than they have been in many years."

Mussolini's Demands Ruin Plans for Peace

ETHIOPIA accepted as a basis for discussion the plan submitted by the League of Nations committee of five nations, of which Salvador de Madariaga of Spain was chairman, but Italy rejected it utterly. Then Premier Mussolini offered, in the form of "observations," his counterdemands. The committee considered these quite out of the question and prepared to draw up a report to the league council announcing that its efforts had proved futile.

Salvador de Madariaga

Thus Italy was left in the position of having rejected all peace proposals and Ethiopia had made its case stronger by having accepted as a negotiatory instrument a plan that called on her to make drastic concessions. The issue was in this way put up to the council, whose duty was next to proceed under article 15 of the covenant, leading to sanctions against Italy unless Mussolini yields.

The Italian demands were considered most extravagant. One was for a sort of mandate over all of Ethiopia except the relatively small area inhabited by the Amharic people, who constitute the ruling class. Another was that Italy be ceded land to connect Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, now separated by French and British Somaliland. A third was for demobilization and disarming of a considerable portion of the Ethiopian army, the remainder to be put under Italian commanders.

In the diplomatic jockeying that followed the communication of these terms by Aloisi to Madariaga, the Italian baron said the proposals were unofficial, and this left the way open for further discussion. It was reported that the French and Italian delegates to the league had persuaded the British representatives that the three nations should hold another Stresa conference to insure European peace.

Great Britain informed Italy that her tremendous naval concentration in the Mediterranean was not ordered with any aggressive motive but because of the violent anti-English campaign carried on by the Fascist press of Italy. The massing of the British warships at Gibraltar, Malta, Alexandria and the Suez canal continued, and Italy responded by rearranging her naval dispositions. Also the flow of Italian troops to East Africa was continuous, and it was announced in Rome that 200,000 soldiers of the classes of 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914 had reported for duty. This brought to 1,000,000 the total Italian mobilization, which Mussolini some time ago promised would be the mark reached before October 1.

Officials in Rome declared that Italy was determined to press a military campaign in Ethiopia, feeling that only by such a campaign—in which modern weapons would be called into play—could Ethiopia be eliminated as a "danger." They explained that Italy would do everything in its power to avoid a clash with Britain, and if possible, would localize its conflict with Ethiopia in east Africa.

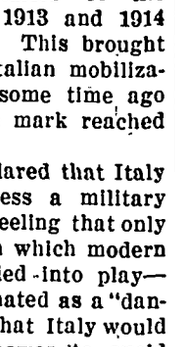
Secretary Hull Sets Up Arms Control Office

PREPARING for the imminent probability of war between Italy and Ethiopia, Secretary of State Cordell Hull established an office of arms and munitions control to carry out the provisions of the neutrality act and direct federal control of the munitions traffic.

The office is under the direction of R. Walton Moore, assistant secretary of state. Joseph C. Green is chief of the office and has as his assistant Charles W. Yost.

Strong, Swift Army Urged by General MacArthur

GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, retiring chief of staff, in his final report recommended a five-year plan for making the American army into an instrument of speed, fighting ability and destructive power unsurpassed elsewhere. Quality rather than quantity, he said, was needed, and he proposed that all implements of war be modernized and that the technical training of the officers be intensified. He said:



Gen. MacArthur

"Beyond all doubt, any major war of the future will see every belligerent nation highly organized for the single purpose of victory, the attainment of which will require integration and intensification of individual and collective effort.

"But it will be a nation at war rather than a nation in arms. Of this vast machine the fighting forces will be only the cutting edge; their mandatory characteristics will be speed in movement, power in fire and shock action, and the utmost in professional skill and leadership.

"Their armaments will necessarily be of the most efficient types obtainable and the transportation, supply and maintenance systems supporting them will be required to function perfectly and continuously. Economic and industrial resources will have to insure the adequacy of munitions supply and the sustenance of the whole civil population. In these latter fields the great proportion of the employable population will find its war duty."

French Croix De Feu Men in Big Mobilization

FRENCH Nationalists, whose organization is known as Croix de Feu, are preparing to take over control of the government—at some future time not yet determined. Just to show their strength, they were directed by their leader, Col. Francois de la Rocque, to "mobilize" the other night secretly in forests and fields throughout France, and it was claimed that 250,000 members gathered. Communists and Socialists attacked the "Cross of Fire" at Caen and other places and several men were injured. De la Rocque's followers, however, refrained from violence. To one of the meetings he addressed, the would-be dictator said: "We won't fight back until the time comes for mass mobilization; then we will fight as a single unit."

Remembering what Mussolini and his Fascists did in Italy, these Croix de Feu men may have to be reckoned with later in France.

Manuel Quezon Is Elected Philippines President

WHEN the new Philippines commonwealth is formally born on November 15 in Manila, with Vice President John M. Garner officiating as its godfather, Manuel Quezon, for 20 years the leader of the fight for independence, will be inaugurated as its first president. In the recent election he and his entire ticket were victorious. The defeated rivals for the presidency were Emilio Aguinaldo, who led the rebellion against American rule years ago, and Bishop Gregorio Aglipay. They were virtually snowed under.

Manuel Quezon

Sergio Osmena was elected vice president, and victory of Manuel Roxas, Quintin Paredes and Camilo Osias assured the new president ample leadership in the unicameral national assembly, where he also will have a clear voting majority.

Quezon's term of office is six years and his annual salary will be $15,000.

Aguinaldo charged fraud in the election and sent a protest to President Roosevelt. But all he obtained from that quarter was an indirect snub, for the President immediately sent to Quezon the following message:

"My most official congratulations upon your election to the highest office within the gift of the Filipino people. Your overwhelming choice by the electorate is a fitting culmination of your many years of patriotic labor in behalf of the country."

President Gets Ready for Western Trip

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned to the White House from his three weeks' vacation in Hyde Park and started in on a busy week of official duties and preparation for his trip to San Diego, Calif. Among the first things he did was the delivery of a radio address in behalf of the Annual Mobilization for Human Needs. In this he explained his position on taxing corporation gifts to charity. He also took up the matter of speeding up the expenditure of the huge work relief fund and discussed with advisers the problem of the soft coal miners' strike. Mr. Roosevelt will not make many speeches on his western jaunt.

By executive order the President added $800,000,000 to the sum which Harry Hopkins has to spend as PWA administrator, making the total at his command $1,375,000,000.

LIEUT. FELIX WAITKUS, young Chicago and Wisconsin aviator, made a gallant effort to fly solo and nonstop from New York to Kaunas, Lithuania, and failed, though he did get safely across the Atlantic ocean. Lost in fog and tired out, he made a forced landing on a rough field near Ballinrobe, Ireland. The machine was badly damaged but Waitkus was uninjured.

De Wolf Hopper, Comedian, Taken by Death

DEATH came suddenly in Kansas City to De Wolf Hopper, American comedian, who for more than half a century had been a favorite of theater-goers. He was seventy-seven years old and of late had been giving weekly radio broadcasts. He succumbed to a heart attack.

Missouri Farmers Sentenced for Plattsburg Riot

TWELVE Missouri farmers have been convinced that it doesn't pay to interfere with Federal court proceedings and they were sentenced to Leavenworth for terms ranging from one day to three years. The farmers wept, and the judge relented, placing them on probation. Led by Sam Divelbiss, on whose farm a foreclosure sale was to be held, they disarmed and beat United States Marshal H. L. Dillingham and three aids and threatened them with hanging. The farmers were arrested and taken before Federal Judge Reeves in St. Joseph, who said they were guilty of holding federal officers captive, damaging a motor car, mayhem, felonious assault, robbery, disturbance of the peace, rioting and resisting an officer.

The defendants pleaded guilty and were promptly sentenced. The government charged that the Farmers' Protective association fostered the riotous gathering and so Clifton Gall, its secretary, was given the heaviest penalty.

Pennsylvanians Against Basic Law Changes

WHILE all the nation was celebrating Constitution day, the citizens of Pennsylvania went to the polls and voted overwhelmingly against the calling of a Constitutional convention for the purpose of "modernizing" the state's basic law which was adopted 61 years ago. Since the proposed changes were to have a decided New Deal trend, the Republicans looked on the result of the referendum as a victory of national significance. The revision was strongly supported by Governor Earle and the state Democratic organization and also by organized labor.

Eccles Will Direct New Reform of Banking

MARRINER S. ECCLES, head of the federal reserve system, has been re-appointed by the President, and so will be chairman of the board that will put into operation the new banking reform law. Later the President will name six other members of the board. Mr. Eccles is the exponent of the theories that monetary control must be from a "national viewpoint," that the government should spend heavily in bad times to create employment and expand credit, and that it should tax in good years to reduce debt and prevent excessive accumulation of income.

Mercker, Potato Czar, Will Have His Troubles

A. E. MERCKER, who used to be secretary of the Interstate Early Potato committee, has been made head of the potato section of the Agricultural adjustment administration, and his troubles are just beginning. Control of the potato crop is considered a natural sequence in the policy that is being followed by the AAA, and, like other parts of Secretary Wallace's agricultural plan, it is supported earnestly and as seriously condemned. Among those who oppose potato control is Porter R. Chandler of Geneseo, N. Y., a gentleman farmer. He has advertised extensively his intention to grow and sell potatoes in defiance of the federal potato control act and invites prosecution.

A. E. Mercker

Now, co-operating with Mr. Chandler, comes Norman C. Norman, a New York jeweler who some time ago defied the jewelers' code. He sent to the gentleman farmer an order for six or more bushels of "strictly illegal potatoes," and the order was filled at once. Norman suggested that the potatoes be routed through New Jersey to make the offense interstate, and offered to make more than one purchase, "as it is my understanding that the second purchase will entitle me to go to the penitentiary."

McCarl Stops Funds for Reedsville Factory

COMPTROLLER GENERAL MCCARL in a formal opinion held that there is no legal authorization for the federal government to pay out any funds for the construction of a furniture factory at Reedsville, W. Va. This has been a project especially favored by Mrs. Roosevelt. It was intended originally that the factory should make furniture for government offices and give employment to transplanted coal miners. A year ago McCarl refused to sanction an allocation to the factory from recovery funds. Then congress turned on the project on the ground that it descriminated against private industry. McCarl says the Department of the Interior went ahead with letting contracts for the construction, nevertheless, and the building is about 80 per cent completed.

Comittee of Lawyers Hits New Labor Law

"UNCONSTITUTIONAL" is the verdict of the American Liberty league's committee of 58 lawyers on the Wagner-Connery labor relations act.

"It is out belief," said the opinion, written in the form of a brief, "that the statute unnecessarily and arbitrarily infringes upon the individual liberties of the employer and the employee and is therefore invalid."

This is the first of a proposed series of opinions on recent federal legislation by the committee of lawyers.

Copies of the opinion were sent to all members of the full committee and dissenting opinions were invited, but none were offered.

Washington Said It
Scaring Mussolini
Ethiopian War Fever
Not Even a Nest Egg

One hundred and thirty-nine years ago George Washington made his farewell address. It is mid-Victorian to drag in George Washington now, when so many are prepared to write a better Constitution than the one he signed. Nevertheless, some of the old-fashioned may tolerate a reminder that in his farewell address George Washington said:

Arthur Brisbane

"It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

Also, with apologies to pacifists and high-spirited young college gentlemen who say they would not fight under any circumstances, you are reminded that George Washington said in 1790:

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

If Mussolini can be scared by British gestures, he will be scared, with England sending her great battleships to the Gibraltar harbor. Other battleships and thousands of soldiers are sent to her island of Malta, and, imitating real war, she is putting "submarine booms" in the Gibraltar harbor on the assumption that wicked Mussolini might send submarines to blow up her battleships: and that is exactly what he would do if it came to war.

Mussolini is not alone in his desire for war. On Sunday in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, according to the Associated Press, "2,000 shrieking Ethiopians," yelling "We want war," gathered before the imperial palace demanding weapons. The Associated Press says: "The scene was so violent that police confiscated motion picture films of it." That was wise, because films might have convinced the outside world that Ethiopians and Italians are much alike, "under the skin."

Sewell L. Avery, head of Montgomery Ward & Co., will tell you that the work of the tax gatherers in America is done thoroughly. His company, on its regular business in six months, made $4,349,766. Taxes on this business amounted to $4,600,000, or $251,000 more than the concern earned. You might almost call that "discouraging business." When you take the eggs from the nest of the hen that would like to set, you always leave one egg, or at least a door knob, "to go on with."

Dispatches from Tokyo tell of planning political murder wholesale.

The "god-sent troops" that have committed occasional murders in highest places are tired of "occasional" murders, and decided to wipe out the Japanese cabinet in an air raid with bombs, destroy the financial district of Tokyo, assassinate hundreds of industrial and financial leaders and "re-establish imperial despotism."

The burning of buildings to put the throne and Tokyo in a state of chaos was part of the plan.

Sir Malcolm Campbell, who took his giant English-built automobile to the smooth surface of the Great Salt desert, west of Salt Lake City, and drove the car faster than 300 miles an hour, returns to New York advising motorists to "drive carefully."

Sir Malcolm, who has surpassed every speed record on the surface of the earth, selects the right place for speeding. At home he belongs to English organizations established to promote safety.

Sir James Jeans, British astronomer and physicist, whose "The Mysterious Universe" and other books you should read, has changed his mind about the age of the universe, and, like Professor Einstein, when he changes his mind he tells you.

He thinks the universe is about 10,000,000,000,000 or ten trillions of years old. That is a long time to Sir James Jeans and us, but, for all Jeans or anybody else knows, it may mean less than one hour in the life of some "super-universe."

Hitler, talking to his army about "iron discipline," blames Christianity and the Hohenzollerns for the rise of Communism that "I crushed when I came to power." Whether he crushed it or not remains to be seen.

A sailor from an American ship is locked up in Germany for humming "The Internationale," Communist hymn, and making the hymn worse by saying something unpleasant about Hitler.

Palmetto, Ga., reports negro tenant farmers selling their salt pork and eating chicken instead, because prices for pork are higher than for chickens. The drouth, lack of feed and the professor who invented the idea of killing mamma pigs before the little pigs were born are highly appreciated by Georgia's "hog raisers."

VEGETABLES MAY BE USED AS INDOOR WINTER PLANTS

Several types of vegetables may be used as decorative house plants during the winter, says A. T. Erwin vegetable crops specialist at Iowa State College.

Parsley can be transplanted from the field in the fall and grown as a house plant. It is best to trim back the tops and take as much of the roots and soil surounding the plant as possible. For a few days after the parsley has been transplanted keep the roots in a cool shady place, covering the tops with newspapers to check wilting and to give the roots an opportunity to become reestablished. The tops may be used for garnishing and seasoning.

To make a sweet potato into a house plant, place a good, sound root in a jar of water, leaving the upper half above the water and place in a sunny window. The potato will sprout and make an attractive vine. The red skinned varieties such as red Bermuda and red Jersey give a reddish colored vine more colorful than the yellow skinned sorts.

Carrots, handled in the same way are fitting house plants, but a novel effect is gained when a large carrot is hollowed out at the top, hung by a wire and filled with water. When the leaves sprout out the edge of the thick outer top a natural hanging basket is the result.

Turnips can be used also for a winter supply of garnishing. Erwin advises that a large root be selected and after the top has been cut away, plant the root in a pot of sand, If kept in a warm dark place the plant will produce a supply of blanched leaves, quite palatable and tender.

It's about time for the new calendars to begin to appear.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

The regular meeting of the American Legion will be held on Thursday, October 10, at 8 o'clock in the Royal Neighbor Hall. All members are urged to be present for installation of officers. Mrs. Dave Schwichtenberg will act as installing officer. Each member will please bring something for the lunch.

The Auxiliary wishes to thank those who purchased flowers on Forget-Me-Not day. These flowers are made by the veterans in the hospital in Des Moines. This day, which is similar to Poppy Day in May, has been observed annually by other units for many years but this was the first attempt to sell any by the local Auxiliary and the result was most gratifying. All money contributed was sent directly to the Des Moines Veterans hospital.

This is the beginning of a new year and all dues should be paid, New members are always welcome.

The local unit will be hostess to the county organization on the 4th Tuesday of October.

On behalf of the retiring officers the Auxiliary wants to thank Editor Jorgenson for the many courtesies shown the unit during the year.

THE WORK OF CREDIT

Bank Shows How It Gives Needed Aid to All Classes of Prudent Borrowers

How a bank loan portfolio presents a graphic cross section picture of the business of its community is disclosed by the description which a midwestern bank recently gave of its loans to customers. It revealed also how closely interwoven with its neighbors' varied lives are the threads of the bank's financial helpfulness.

This description showed that the bank had made a loan of $100,000 to a local shoe manufacturer to purchase materials, discount bills and meet current requirements.

To a wholesale grocer $95,000 had been advanced for tho purchase of inventory, the loan to be repaid over a period in accordance with specified terms set forth in the loan agreement.

Assistance in Personal Matters

Another loan had been made to a home owner to the amount of $200 for painting and repairing. This was made in cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration and was being repaid in twenty-four monthly installments of $8.33 each.

A dentist had been loaned $300 to purchaso new equipment. He was paying off the debt out of his professional earnings as they camo in.

To a large domestic refrigerator distributor $30,000 had been granted on warehouse receipts to finance dealer shipments.

A home owner had been granted a $3,000 mortage loan to be repaid in threo years.

One thousand dollars had been advanced to an office worker on the cash surrender value of his insurance policy to aid him in meeting an emergency.

The National Total

If each of these various examples were multiplied many times the result would represent the total volume of credit cooperation which the bank was extending to its neighbors in its community, for aggregate loans to all its customers amounted to more than twelve million dollars.

If the typical examples here given were multiplied by many millions of times the result would represent the total economic cooperation which the banking system of the country as a whole is extending to aid the innumerable personal, professional, industrial and commercial activities which make up the whole business life of the nation. The nationwide total of such loans is in excess of 20 billion dollars.

BANKS PLAN ADVERTISING

Substantial funds have been set aside from reserves of the American Bankers Association to finance the development by its Advertising Department of a service of informative newspaper advertisements setting forth in brief, popular language the methods and policies under which banks operate, their effective practices for protecting their depositors' funds, the services they render and the various ways in which they cooperate with business in their own communities in fostering sound recovery and progress.

Some 350 banks are now using this material and it is available at a moderte price for all of the members in the association who care to use it in bringing about better public understanding in their own communities regarding banking and its services. It has materally stimulated the use of newspaper advertising among banks.

Many favorable comments have been expressed regarding the informative and constructive character of its messages. It is issued in two sizos: the larger size is 3 columns wide by 10 inches deep, but in some instances subscribing banks have expanded this to occupy full pages in their local papers in order to obtain a more emphatic effect. Four pieces of advertising copy are supplied each month in this service.

BANKERS SUPPORT ACTIVE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association is promoting widely among bankers the practice of aiding their farm customers in installing on their farms better financial, accounting and operating methods. It also cooperates in the endeavors of the state bankers' associations along similar lines.

The commission has published a book on "Making Farm Investments Safe," presenting a compendium of helpful material published over a period of years as a reference guide in the daily routine of banking and farming relationships. It has also published 'Factors Affecting Farm Credit," discussing in an illustrative way how farm credit can be obtained on a sound basis

Another publication is the monthly Bulletin of the commission which circulates to about 10,000 persons, among them the county agents throughout the United States, who make frequent use of the material and suggestions prepared by the commission. Likewise, the commission has appointed 2,300 key bankers covering every county in the United States, who act as focal points in their districts in fostering better understanding between bankers and farmers.

A HUGE BANKING SYSTEM

The latest official figures covering all banks in the United States show that there are 16,042 licensed banking institutions of every kind and that over 63,000,000 persons have entrusted them with their deposits to the amount of $44,500,000,000.

Frock That Puts Accent on Youth

PATTERN 9343

Always a good beginning, this youthful tailored collar on the simple yoke makes a demure foil for the dainty softness of the bodice. The prettiness of the chic frock is furthered with a graceful flare sleeve—or it may puff, if you prefer. The results are so satisfying you'll find it real fun to run up this little dress in a dainty printed silk or cotton. A soft handkerchief linen would be stunning, too, and so easy to tub. Buttons and belt can pick up a color in the print and make a striking accent.

Pattern 9343 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3½ yards 39-inch fabric. Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

United States Ahead of Europe in Flying Boats

Foreign Manufacturers Using Subsidies to Catch Up.

Washington.—Backed by large government subsidies aircraft factories in Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy are busily at work on huge flying boats aimed at catching up in the race for over-ocean trade routes of the air which the American system, Pan American Airways, now dominates. There is rivalry as between the European countries themselves, but all are bent upon a race with American aviation in the field of overseas flying in which the big Clipper ships constructed in this country are far in the van.

Few details of specifications on foreign boats have been allowed to leak through the cordon of military secrecy. Those craft that have reached the flying stage, however, have fallen far below the performance of the American ships. Great Britain, for example, started the testing of the first of her four-engined flying boats of new construction on a flight by easy stages from Plymouth to Singapore. Preliminary test flights of the Short Brothers craft showed that in efficiency it did not compare with the Sikorsky and Martin Clippers built here.

New Boats for England.

Construction has therefore been begun by the air ministry for Imperial Airways of two six-engined, 35-ton flying boats for the domination of the transatlantic route to America. One of these ships is being built by Short Brothers and the other by Blackburn Ltd.

The French have had preliminary hard luck with the first of their ocean-going giants to be flown, the 37-ton Lieutenant de Vaisseau Paris. Powered with six 980-horsepower engines, this boat was constructed inland and then hauled to the sea in order to better preserve the secrets of its construction details and spring a surprise when it went into service for Air France.

The Pan American Clipper has twice crossed the Pacific, 2,410 miles between California and Hawaii at an average speed of 136 miles an hour and had sufficient gasoline in the tanks at either end for an additional 800 miles.

While the first of the three big Martin boats being built at Baltimore for the American airline weighs 26 tons as against the 37 of the Vaisseau Paris, it can carry as great a passenger, mail and express load over ranges of 2,000 miles and transport them nearly 50 miles an hour faster and at one-third of the estimated cost per mile. The Martin, which will have speed trials in the next week or so, has already made 180 miles an hour in tests over Chesapeake bay.

Italy Holds Speed Records.

Details of Germany's Dornier Wal boats for the South Atlantic service, except those comparatively small types which have been using the steamer Westfalen as a mid-ocean base, are unavailable here. Little more about Italy's big boats is available. It is known, however, that within the past year Premier Mussolini welded into one operating unit, government owned, all operating airlines under the Italian flag for the acknowledged purpose of a unified drive for a dominant place in the 300,000 miles of organized airways which now link the outposts of the world.

Under the impetus of this move Italy has already achieved world's records for aircraft speed and distance. The lessons learned from the smaller aircraft making these records are said to be incorporated in long-range flying boats now under construction. Two of them are four-engined of 3,600 horsepower each.

Chinese Remember College Rah-Rahs

Nanking.—The great impression which American university life has made on the Chinese national government was well illustrated at the annual meeting of the American University Club at Nanking. Six hundred graduates of colleges and universities in the United States attended the function, the vast majority being Chinese. Practically the entire 600 members are officials of the government. American college yells and songs showed that the Chinese had not forgotten their student life.

Dental Drug Makes Patients See Double

Puts End to Choking Sensation of Gas.

London.—A jab in the arm instead of the choking sensation of gas is a new method of "putting you to sleep" in the dentist's chair.

The new drug is called evipan-sodium, and it has been in use for some months, not only for dental work but for more serious operations.

You sit in the chair. The anesthetist puts a strap around your upper arm just as in taking a blood pressure.

A vein expands a little under the pressure. You feel a short jab of the needle.

In a second things become hazy. You feel delightfully tired. Then you sleep.

There is none of that swelling, bursting, choking feeling that gas gives some people.

You do not suspect the surgeon and the doctor of trying to suffocate you.

In fact, you do not suspect anything. You do not even dream as you do under gas.

Meanwhile your teeth are being extracted.

Then you come round—slightly intoxicated. You see things double. You are not safe on your feet.

And this is the disadvanage of evipan. Unlike gas, you cannot go back to work after it. You must rest; and sleep.

But the evipan method is excellent for people who have had gas once and fear it.

Almost everybody can have it, if the dentist is given warning that it is wanted. The exceptions are people who have liver trouble or whose veins are too thin to take an injection.

Evipan, however, is more expensive than gas. It is a German discovery.

Some dental experts are against using it, on the grounds that not sufficient is known about the drug.

But it is expected that when sufficient data are available its use in dental and other operations will be more common.

Chinese Officials Order Machine Strangulation

Peiping.—Provincial police authorities are instructed to execute criminals with strangulation machines in an order issued by the Chinese Ministry of Justice.

The penal code provides strangulation as the means of carrying out death sentences, but up to the present it has been done by two men twisting a cord about the neck of the convict.

Such a method is declared less humane than the prescribed machine, which, however, will work on the same principle of strangulation.

In order to lessen the shock to the victim, the ministry further prescribes that the culprit be chloroformed prior to carrying out of the death sentence.

Authorities in most places continue, however, to execute some prisoners by the simple expedient of a revolver placed against the base of the skull of the kneeling victim.

Old Lifeguard of Seine Rescues More Than 100

Paris.—Paris nearly lost one of its remaining picturesque characters recently when Father Chartier, as every one calls him, caught a cramp and nearly drowned in the Seine.

Father Chartier is Paris' unofficial lifeguard. All passers who have occasion to cross the Pont St. Michel regularly know his little boat, moored to its quays. It carries a blue pennant on the one small mast, with the white lettering, "Volunteer Lifeguard."

Life saving is Father Chartier's hobby. He has actually rescued from the treacherous and swiftly flowing waters of the Seine more than 100 persons. He has 40 life saving medals. He made his first rescue when he was thirteen. That makes 49 years he has been a life saver. He is sixty-two now.

Austrian Blind Will Be Aided by Yankee Couple

Vienna.—Through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Graves Mather of New York city Austria soon will have its own lighthouse for the blind.

When the Austrian Lighthouse is founded it will be the eleventh caring for the blinded poor of four continents, the North and South Americas, the Far East, and Europe.

Mrs. Mather, the former Winifred Holt of charity fame in New York, has interested Princess Fanny Starhemberg, Austria's vice chancellor, in the scheme.

It is proposed to organize the Austrian Lighthouse at Lillenfeld, where the blinded poor from all parts of Austria can gather to learn new trades. It will be conducted on similar lines to the blind institutions established in New York, Paris, China, Japan, and South America by Mrs. Mather and her husband.

Professor Calls Five Hours' Rest Sufficient

Helsingfors.—Five hours' sleep a day are sufficient for the average human being, a German professor, Doctor Schiffhauser, believes, after experiments. In order to live a healthy normal life, he asserts, everyone should go to bed at 7 p. m. and rise again at midnight.

The following of such a spartan rule, he says, will avert all danger of suffering from neurasthenia and similar nerve troubles.

Experiments conducted by the professor on school children are stated to have given beneficial results.

TONY Wells is ace director for the Forrest Film corporation. He is one of the pioneers in the field, having been associated with the industry for nearly twenty-two years. He knows the inside drama of hundreds of personalities, and not infrequently when we are together he will remember some past incident that is worth repeating. Tonight I sat with him and Mrs. Wells on the veranda of their Beverly Hills home. It was dusk and beyond the hedge we could see the lights of Hollywood flung against the sky.

"Right now," I smiled, "is an excellent opportunity to tell me about Darthea Ellis. Remember, you promised to give me her story one of these days."

"Darthea Ellis," Mrs. Wells said suddenly, "wasn't her right name. She only used it because she thought it sounded arty. Her real name was—" Tony looked at his wife in mild reproach, and Mrs. Wells broke off and smiled. "All right, darling, you tell him about Darthea. I guess I didn't know her as well as you."

"No," said Tony, smiling at his thoughts, "I don't think you did." He turned to me. "You see, Darthea Ellis was a personality. The minute she got into pictures she lost her individuality and became a personality. And personalities are easy to know, because they are types."

"I don't think I get it," I said. "But how did Miss Ellis get into the movies in the first place?"

Tony chuckled. "Well, yes, it is interesting. When she arrived in Hollywood she had individuality. But it didn't help her a great deal, because she was one of hundreds. They come every year, these girls, some of them having won beauty contests back in their home town, some having made a hit in an amateur production, some bearing diplomas from dramatic schools, and some arriving cold. By 'cold' I mean a girl who hasn't had any experiences or diplomas or beauty contest prizes, but has simply decided she'd like to be a movie actress and packs up her things and comes to Hollywood. Darthea fitted into the 'cold' class.

"'Darthea,' I Said, Without Preliminaries, 'Let Me Tell You Right Now, You're Riding for a Fall.'"

"It took her a month to discover what she was up against. At the end of two months she had succeeded in getting listed as an extra girl. And within the next three months she was called upon twice to play in mob scenes. Pretty discouraging, you might think. But Darthea wasn't the kind to quit.

"And so she fell to thinking and scheming, and suddenly an idea popped into her head. Why not, she thought, became different from the general run of extra girls?

Why not cause her looks to attract attention when she appeared in a mob scene with hundreds of others? Why not assume a personality?

"Today that idea is shopworn, but then it was quite an innovation. And it worked. The next time Darthea was called to play an extra part she spent several hours making herself up. Slight changes, such as penciling her eyebrows, putting ringlets in her hair, shaping her lips with rouge to create a different impression. The effect was quite astonishing. She stood out in that crowd of extra girls like nobody's business.

"Lee MacReady, one of my assistants, was handling the scene, and he came up to me after it was over, with Darthea in tow. 'Look,' he said, grinning broadly, 'what I found.' I looked and was at first impressed. Later I became skeptical. But I kept the skepticism to myself. The industry was young then and I was young and willing to take a chance.

"We gave Darthea a minor role in out next production and the results were alarming. I believe I can truthfully say she was the first unknown to steal a picture. The movie-going people went wild over her performance. MacReady was delighted, proud of his find. I didn't want to tell him what I thought: I didn't dare to. Lee or anyone else would have laughed. So I kept quiet and agreed to star her opposite Lynn Jenney. But even when she stole the show from that great actor I was still skeptical. Moreover, I felt guilty about not warning the kid. It wasn't right.

"Well, time went on, and Darthea made another picture with equally successful results, and my feeling of guilt grew more pronounced. In the end I decided to tell the kid exactly what I thought, even though it cost me my job.

"It was hard telling her, hard because she was so likeable, such a really decent sort and so delighted with her own success. The kindest way, I convinced myself, was to be brutally frank, to get it all over with at once.

"And so I called her into my office. 'Darthea,' I said, without preliminaries, 'let me tell you right now, you're riding for a fall. It can't last.'

"She stared at me with her big round innocent eyes, and for a moment I felt like a cad and wished I hadn't begun. 'I don't believe I understand, Mr. Wells. What is it that can't last?'

"I looked away, got a grip on myself and plunged. 'It can't last,' I said, 'because you're a personality. Because you've lost your individuality. Because you'll become a type. Because you're not an actress nor ever will be. Right now the movies are in their infancy, and most anything goes. But before long the public is going to demand art. They're going to become fed up on seeing a mere personality exhibit herself on the screen. They're going to weary of types. Styles are going to change, and stars like yourself are bound to take a dive—'

"I broke off, because Darthea's face had gone white and her eyes were blazing. 'You've said quite enough, Mr. Wells. For almost a year I worked as an extra girl and half starved myself to keep on, trying to attract your attention by merely being myself. And at last I had to resort to something else. It was my own idea and it worked. It brought me fame and a good income, and now when it looks as though I were on the road to becoming great—well, I'm not interested in your advice, Mr. Wells, or in you or in Forrest Films. I happen to be in demand and I'm going where I'm appreciated and where I'm paid the most money.'

"And with this she turned and went out. Well, it couldn't be helped. Maybe I'd done wrong, but at least my conscience was clear. I felt better, and I didn't lose my job, even though Darthea left us and went with National."

Tony paused. It was quite dark now, but I sensed that he was smiling. "So what happened?" I asked.

Tony turned his head. "What happened? Why, the only thing that could happen. Within six months every extra girl, in fact two-thirds of the feminine population of the country, caught on to Darthea's artifice and copied her personality. Incredible though it seems, they could do it easily merely by applying a bit of eyebrow pencil and rouge and a curling iron. Darthea ceased to become an individual or even a personality. She became a type."

He paused, and it seemed to me that he intended to say something further and thought better of it. Then Mrs. Wells spoke out of the darkness.

"You see, Darthea wasn't an artist, and only artists last in the movies, or anywhere else. That's why Tony is a great director today—because he's an artist, enough of an artist to realize what Darthea lacked, and enough of a man to warn her against what was to come.

Another pause. I felt suddenly strange and queer. "What became of her?" I asked. "Was that the end of Darthea Ellis? She must have hated Tony—"

Mrs. Wells' laughter cut me off. "She did. And she came back to tell him, just what she thought of him. Her laughter sounded again. "Didn't Tony tell you how it all ended?"

"No," I smiled, and everything was suddenly clear. "Tony didn't tell me. But I can guess Tony was artist enough to recognize the woman behind Darthea Ellis, eh? That's why he warned her. And that, too, is why he married her. Eh, Mrs. Wells?"

"I never knew," said Mrs. Wells. "I was never enough interested to ask."

Variety of Flavors Are Supplied by Eucalyptus

A classification of many of the eucalyptus trees reads like a catalog of flavoring extracts for cakemaking. Some of them, states a writer in the Los Angeles Times, are the peppermint gum, lemon-scented gum, apple-scented gum and sugar gum. The crushed leaves of these trees actually have the designated odors.

The general classification of the eucalyptus in Australia is as follows: (1) Gums or smooth barks, (2) stringybarks, (3) ironbarks, (4) rough barks and half barks, which includes the boxes, bloodwoods, peppermints and ashes, (5) mallees, which are shrubs or small trees.

The peppermints are the tallest trees in the world. The almost unbelievable heights of the taller eucalyptus trees vary from 400 to almost 600 feet. It is said that there is a eucalyptus tree near Sydney 525 feet high and the story is authentic, the tree would be 61 feet higher than the beacon on the Los Angeles city hall, which is 454 feet above the ground. A peppermint measured in Victoria was found to be exactly 1 inch over 326 feet. The highest Sequoia is the Mark Twain with a height of 331 feet, in the Mariposa grove. The famous General Sherman tree in Sequoia park is 280 feet high.

One of the modest cousins of the giants of the eucalyptus family, known as Eucalyptus polyanthemos or the Australian beech. It is one of the hardiest and most drought-resistant of the small types of eucalypti. It grows well near the ocean as its limbs are very tough and wiry and do not break easily in the wind. Its maximum height is only about 35 feet, the trunk diameter is usually not over 24 inches. It is sometimes called the red box in Australia. The bark is gray, slightly rough, and does not

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—I believe the trend of recent developments begins to indicate rather definitely that President Roosevelt is going to be able to hold a rather united Democratic party behind him in his next campaign. The chances of a split in his ranks are very small, indeed, and the shifting changes of which there are at present no hints at all, the New Deal will encompass the Democratic party which nominated and elected Mr. Roosevelt as President.

Party Backs Roosevelt

By those statements, it is not meant that no defections will take place. There always are some disgruntled and dissatisfied party men who break away. They have done it with Republicans and Democrats with equal abandon. There will be some in the 1936 campaign, but not very many. These statements are made by way of discounting offshoots of consequence under radical leadership and offshoots of equal consequence behind old-line conservative Democratic leadership. It is, of course, quite possible that William Randolph Hearst, the publisher, and Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state under Woodrow Wilson, may succeed in development of a conservative alignment with Republican support but the situation is not likely to cause the New Deal leadership any particular embarrassment. Likewise the death of Senator Huey P. Long removes what might possibly have been a radical party wedge. The late Louisiana senator was making considerable progress in development of a radical party but with him removed from the political scene there is no longer any possibility of that group attaining a place of importance in the political structure. They are fighting among themselves and it is apparent now that the group will be split into a score of factions, none which will have any capacity to accomplish the purposes which Senator Long had outlined.

Judged impartially, the death of Senator Long ought to enhance the Democratic prospects in 1936. This certainly is true unless the administration between now and the next election decides to woo the conservative vote in the country and in doing so offends the progressive segment of voters to which Mr. Roosevelt largely owes his 1932 election. To reiterate, it is possible, of course, that Mr. Roosevelt or his party leaders may make mistakes which will throw the whole party machine out of gear, but they are not now in sight.

Long's Death Helps

The reason the passing of Huey Long is important from the political standpoint is pictured most reliably in the history of third party movements. While it is obvious that Senator Long could never have been elected President—and I believe he was too smart a politician to think that he could have been successful—there was the danger from the Roosevelt standpoint that he might alienate some part of the vote which elected Mr. Roosevelt in 1932. If he had been able to do this, it is certain that Republican chances would have been enhanced because the Republican vote would have remained solidly behind the Republican candidate.

Some years ago, Robert M. La Follette, then a senator from Wisconsin, sought the Presidency on a third party ticket. He polled about five million votes. This happened at a time when the country was reasonably prosperous. Today, the economic conditions were of a character that bred less discontent than those of this depression era. Astute political observers tell me that it takes little stretch of the imagination to conceive of a radical party led by a man of the dynamic characteristics of Huey Long, being able to poll as many as ten million votes throughout the country despite the difficulties that always face the organization of a new political party. Whatever criticism may have been leveled at the late senator in Louisiana, everywhere one goes among political leaders, he obtains the impression of opinion respecting the senator's ability. He had a smart mind, one that grasped situations, particularly in politics, with great speed and he was always ready at a moment's notice to capitalize on those situations. Thus, if Mr. Long had lived, it is easy to imagine what he would have done in case the New Deal leaders made mistakes. He would have pounced on those mistakes with the ferocity of a cat on a mouse; he would have magnified them in his speeches to the following and by these acts he would have aided and abetted the Republican opposition.

While the national capital was shocked by Senator Long's death and stunned at the manner of his going, it was a violation of any confidence to say that New Deal politicians are resting easier. They enjoyed Huey, the way they recognized in him an adversary decidedly dangerous to their

As to other factors involved, that might withdraw support from Mr. Roosevelt. I said above that the Hearst-Colby movement is doomed to. The real effect and probably the only effect that movement will have will be to force the Roosevelt leaders to realign their strength in some states. Mr. Hearst, with the great power of his string of newspapers behind him, has yet to succeed in creating a potent political group. He attempted it when the late Warren Harding of Ohio was the Republican nominee and James M. Cox of the same state was put forward by the Democrats. It was my good fortune to be assigned as a correspondent to the convention of Mr. Hearst's new party. It was evident then as it later was proved by the votes that the enthusiastic delegates to that convention represented a following so small as to be utterly negligible. Even with the astute advice of Bainbridge Colby, little more will come out of the current movement.

Then, those who have their eyes on the facts instead of on the ballyhoo will promptly discount the talk about Democratic defection when they stop to consider some other things that are taking place. For example, there have been no more bitter dissents from New Deal policies than Senator Carter Glass of Virginia and Senator Thomas P. Gore of Oklahoma have voiced. Mr. Glass lately has engaged in rites of burying the hatchet to the extent that he is not going to run for re-election in Virginia as anything but a Democrat.

Out in Oklahoma, Senator Gore has been making speeches that sound strangely as though he is almost friendly with the administration. He has been telling his audiences that he has stood with the President on many votes in the senate, sometimes when his vote was badly needed. Though it becomes apparent that while neither Senator Glass nor Senator Gore is enthusiastic about New Deal policies, neither of them is going to desert the Democratic party.

And, so it is in any number of other cases. They may not speak glowingly of President Roosevelt in their own campaigns for re-election but as candidates they are not going to fight him openly.

"Big Jim" Farley, the master New Deal politician, successfuly avoided an out and out test of New Deal issues in Ohio when Governor Davey of that state announced recently that there would be no special election to choose a representative at large to fill a vacancy. The Ohio governor said it would cost too much money to hold a special election, his announcement being made at the White House just after President Roosevelt had agreed to allot $20,000,000 in public works funds for Ohio use.

Avoids New Deal Test

But the astute Mr. Farley is not going to be able to avoid a test on New Deal issues in Kentucky. The situation in that state is that a Democrat of President Roosevelt's choice and who is supporting the New Deal from start to finish is running for governor against a hard-boiled and conservative Republican. The election will be the first week in November and thus a state-wide vote can be expected to measure the Roosevelt strength. Because of this, all of the maneuvers are being closely watched and the battle of those ballots obviously will be bitter.

The Kentucky test takes on additional significance and importance because of something that happened in choosing the Democratic nominee. The Kentucky fight is to determine whether Lieut. Gov. A. B. Chandler, the Democrat, or former Representative King Swope, the Republican, will run the state.

Governor Laffoon apparently wanted to have the Democratic nominee selected by the old convention method but the Roosevelt supporters preferred a primary. Consequently, Senator Barkley of Kentucky, a devout Roosevelt follower in the senate, was sent into his home state to see that the primary plan was made operative. The Democratic state committee which was empowered to choose the method of selecting the candidate was determined to have a convention and it was after this determination became known that Mr. Roosevelt participated in dictating the course the party should follow. Senator Barkley arrived in his home state bearing a letter signed "Franklin D. Roosevelt" urging the primary, and while Governor Laffoon was out of the state attempting to convince national leaders that his candidate for the Democratic nomination was the right one, Lieutenant Governor Chandler called a special session of the state legislature and put through a law compelling the selection of the candidate by the primary. Mr. Chandler won the nomination in the run-off although Thomas S. Rhea had polled more votes in the original primary than did Mr. Chandler.

So it is apparent beyond a doubt that Mr. Roosevelt recognizes the necessity for electing a Democrat, and New Deal supporters in Kentucky say that he is prepared to battle to the last ditch to accomplish it.

Nevertheless, the fur will fly in Kentucky in November. It cannot be avoided. If the administration wins, undoubtedly New Deal stock will be enhanced in value. But, if the Republican nominee should win the Kentucky test, the whole New Deal must be prepared to wear an unusual black eye.

WHAT PLAY CAN DO

PLAY is one of the four builders of life. The other three are work, love and religion. Nations have risen like the Greeks and fallen like the Romans through their play. Play has not been given serious enough attention by modern parents, as a factor in their children's physical, intellectual and moral development. Play time has been considered a tag end usually—"run away and play" when there is nothing else to do.

Everything that functions has equal capacities for both good and evil. Food, medicine, exercise and even religion, with the fanatic can change virtue to vice. Progress of the race comes from directing all these functions properly into positive channels. When this does not occur the individual and nation alike may be retarded in its growth for betterment, or still worse may be actually irrevocably harmed. Parents probably seldom think of play and its effects on their children in such serious philosophical terms, and yet play and recreational hours have the power to make or mar young life.

Play should be part of an educationally planned program for children. Each child should be studied by the parents and helped to succeed in at least one kind of sport, or should be furthered in one hobby, whether it be making some kind of toy or collecting insects or stones. These creative loves in children should be hunted out and fostered by parents. This gives to children early in life a sense of achievement which later may grow into a habit of success.

Good sportsmanship not only implies physical skill, but also mental and moral skill, as it takes courage to be a good loser and sometimes more courage to play fair.

Planned play as an educational program will take time, effort and sacrifice on the parents' part, but in the end it brings the largest dividend of character. Parents are sometimes unwilling to give as much of their own pleasure time to play with their children, as such a play program demands. As for instance, a movie manager of one of the large theaters in Chicago told me recently, that in his opinion, the movies have become the modern nurse maids for the children of the rich and poor alike. Cars from Cadillacs to "Tin Lizzies" drive up and disgorge their small occupants each night regardless of the sex picture shown, and the parents drive nonchalantly away. In two or three hours these carefree parents return to take their children home. Some parents a few years hence will wonder why their children are different from their neighbors' children.

GOLD FOR GOD

THERE lived one time a very rich king; his wealth increased so rapidly that he began to think in terms of gold. One evening as he sat alone, long after his little daughter's goodnight kiss, he felt a tiny tapping on his foot. Rubbing his eyes in the subdued light to be convinced he was not dreaming, he heard a tiny voice which said, "Thou art great, O King, and rich; my wand and I can give thee thy one heart's desire. Speak now, ere I go," the fairy said.

"Give me gold," excitedly spoke the king, "Give me the golden touch." "This will be done. At dawn tomorrow thy touch will turn each thing to gold and thou, oh Midas, will become earth's richest king." The fairy circled her tiny wand three times above her head and disappeared. "Can this be true?" thought the king.

The sun was high when the king awoke. "It is true, it is true!" he cried joyfully as he touched his kingly robes into beautiful golden fabrics. As he sat before his morning meal, his heart grew proud and haughty. But, alas, his food, too, turned to gold. "What matters that," he said—"I am the richest king on earth today!" Just then his little daughter laughing and singing, sprang into his arms for her accustomed morning kiss. He held her happy little form close to his heart. But just one moment and there lay in his strong arms, his daughter lifeless, body turned to gold! "Oh, God," he cried in anguish, "what have I done, what have I done! It is not gold I need, but God," he sobbed, failing to his knees. "Help thou me this day, the most wretched man in all my kingdom wide." Another gentle tapping on his sandal brought again the fairy to his side. "Take my gold away and give me God," he cried.

"It shall be done," the fairy said, "But tell me first, O King, wherein real riches lie." From out the depths of his agonized heart the king replied, "In the heart of man, in my fatherhood, in my people, in my honor and service to God and man. My goal has been gold, henceforth it shall be God."

Has America like King Midas been seeking gold instead of God? One statesman recently said of her, she is in "the Twentieth century scientifically, but in the Sixteenth, spiritually." America need seek the abundant life through no other path, for His is "the Way, the Truth, and the Light."

HITCH-HIKING FLY SPREADS DISEASE

The common house fly is a hitch-hiker. However, the fly doesn't bother to jerk a thumb and ask a ride; it flies into moving autos or even trains or airplanes without permission and often travels hundreds of miles before leaving its chosen vehicle.

This habit of flies traveling great distances on other power than their own has made local fly eradication campaigns less effective than the campaigners hoped. Cases have been found where a fly carried disease germs on its legs and body for miles and infected people in the community where it settled. No previous cases of the disease were in existence in the new community and health authorities could find no other source of infection than flies.

Repeated warnings of physicians and health officials have apparently failed to instill a proper fear of the house fly in the average mind. However, a more thorough knowledge of the habits of a fly would increase the respect for this tiny insect, according to authorities on the subject.

Decent cleanliness in any home requires protection against the menace of flies. Whether a fly is home-born or a hitch-hiking visitor, he is a danger. Fortunately, an effective fly-killing program can be conducted in any home by the use of a reliable fly spray containing an ample quantity of Pyrethrins, a product derived from Pyrethrum flowers, which is death to flies, when sprayed in a fine mist.

Use Shotguns to Frighten Noisy Birds From Roost

A shotgun loaded with black powder shells which make a loud noise is recommended by the bureau of biological survey for driving birds away from roosts, when their noise and filth become a nuisance.

Blackbirds starlings, cowbirds, and English sparrows congregate and establish roosts, usually late in the summer. Thousands of birds may gather in a single tree.

Guns are most effective if used early in the evening when the birds first appear. Then they are more easily frightened. After darkness they move only a few yards when the guns are used. Shells carrying No. 6 or No. 8 shot and loaded with black powder are recommended for noise. Shooting into the roosts five or six evenings may be necessary in cases where large roosts have been established. In smaller cities and communities the use of shotguns usually is not forbidden by local regulations.

Roman candles or streams of water from a hose may be effective in localities where the use of firearms is prohibited. Electric lights or bells in trees where the birds roost often drive them away.

Protected species such as robins and purple martins sometimes establish roosts but do not become a great nuisance.

Rats Kill Ferrets and Cats

Tistan da Cunha, the world's loneliest island, is trying to find a way to rid itself of he-man rats which swam ashore from a wreck. The invaders have multiplied, and both cats and ferrets have been sent at various times to exterminate them. But there are no cats, and no ferrets on Tistan da Cunha today. The rats have eaten them all.

"I've discovered Calumet's big, new 10¢ can!"

"No more 'by-guess-and-by-golly' baking in this house now!"
says Mrs. Owen H. Fleming, 1235 Judson Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Mrs. Fleming was one of the first women to get the big, new 10c can of Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

"No need for any woman to take chances with her baking now," she says. "That new 10c can of Calumet certainly means that the very best can be bought at a bargain."

Ask your grocer to show you the new, bigger 10c Calumet can!

A SIMPLE TWIST . . . and the Easy-Off Top lifts off. No spilling, no broken finger-nails!

WHY DOES CALUMET give such astonishing "baking luck?" Why is Calumet different from other baking powders? Because Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl. A slower one for the oven . . . And Calumet's famous double-action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening—every time.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in its history. The Full-Pound Can now sells regularly for only 25¢. And if you want a smaller size—get the new, big 10¢ can—a lot of good baking for a dime—with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

KLEMME PAVING CONTRACT IS LET TO FIRM AT DECORAH

Work Expected To Begin Here In Short Time, Say Engineers

Fred Carlson Co., of Decorah, were awarded the contract for paving .7 miles of highway No. 179 east from highway 69 to the intersection of Main and Second Street.

Engineers from the State Highway Department have spent several days in Klemme during the past week making surveys and staking out the right-of-way. The corner west of Klemme where 179 joins 69 will be greatly widened The hill west of the Rock Island tracks will be cut down and some sections of Main Street will also be cut down. The railroad tracks have been raised to the new grade line.

Highway engineers were of the opinion that the grading crew would arrive in Klemme within a few days to get the road bed in shape for paving.

The cost of the Klemme project is $21,480.

PARITY PRICES REACHED BY IOWA FARM PRODUCTS

Parity prices for farm products—the goal of the Agricultural Adjustment Act—have been reached in Iowa.

The Iowa Farm Price Index, computed by Iowa State College agricultural economists, was 128 percent of the 1910-14 level in September and the index of prices of things farmers buy also was 128 percent of prewar, resulting in 100 percent of "parity' p rchasing power for Iowa farm products.

Parity Not Countrywide

Prices of farm products for the country as a whole still have a long way to go to parity On Sept 15 they were 107 percent of prewar and 87 percent of parity.

The Iowa Farm Price Index was 121 in August. The gain in September was mainly due to higher egg poultry and cattle prices. Cattle and poultry, besides rising in price have greaterweights in the index in September and so have more effect on it in that month. The index has risen 13 points or 11 percent since July.

Index Computed Quarterly

The index of prices paid by farmers is for the country as a whole and so isn't strictly acurate for Iowa farmers. It is computed quartery and stood at 130 in June. Since this index is not computed monthly, the June figure was used in deriving the index of purchasing power for July and August. In July this index stood at 91 percent of parity with prewar and in August at 93.

Parity prices do not mean parity income, the economists explain. Though the Iowa farmer con now exchange his products for the commodities he buys on the same basis he could before the war, the quantity of farm products sold also is a determinant of the income.

M. E. Aid Meets Next Week

The monthly meeting of the Ladies Aid will meet next week Thursday at the church parlors. The ladies will make new curtains for the windows and sew on carpet rags. This is the first meeting of the new year, so everybody come and start the year out assisting in the work of the aid. The aid gave over two hundred and fifty dollars to the budget the past year, and it all work, more can be done this year. Hostesses for the day are Mrs. Ant Kudje, Mrs. Jennings Anderson, Mrs. Wm. Keraus and Mrs. J. P. Heyman.

OLD SHOES

By Gertrude Ryder Bennett

A city closet is no place for you—
Half moccasin, grotesquely flat and wide!
I could not wear you on the Avenue.
With peasant awkwardness you rest beside Aristocratic heels. But once we stood
Before a cataract that tossed its spray
On mossy banks; tramped a fragrant wood
Where earth was like incense and our way
Was intercepted by a tree that bent
Its forehead to the ground as if in prayer
Through heavy boughs the sun was reverent
And silent benediction filled the air.
Discard you? No! You bring dreams—then
Sometime we may go tramping off again.

Iowa Migratory Waterfowl Laws Announced By State Commission

IOWA MIGRATORY WATERFOWL REGULATIONS

Rules and regulations for the taking of migratory waterfowl in Iowa have been adopted by the Conservation Commission and are patterned after the Federal Regulations, but do not include the entire provisions of the Federal regulations Hunters should take note of the Iowa provisions and not become confused when hunting migratory waterfowl.

The open season for the taking of ducks, geese, brant, coot, Wilson's snipe or jacksnipe in Iowa is from October 21 to November 19, inclusive.

The shooting hours when migratory waterfowl may be lawfully taken are from 7 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p m each day during the open season.

The daily bag limits are as follows ducks, not more than 10 in the aggregate of all kinds: geese or brant, not more than 4 in the aggregate of all kinds; coot or mudhens, not more than 15; Wilson's snipe or jacksnipe, not more than fifteen.

The possession limit shall not exceed the daily bag limit for any of the species and it is unlawful to have more than a total of 30 game birds or animals of all kinds at any one time. Migratory waterfowl may be possesed for ten days after the close of the migratory waterfowl season.

How Migratory Game Birds May Be Taken In Iowa

Migratory game birds on which there has been declared an open season in Iowa may be lawfully taken during the open season with a shot gun only, not larger than a No. 10 gauge (Federal regulations limit guns to 3 shells) shot from the shoulder, from the land or water, with the aid of a dog, and from a blind, boat or floating craft of any kind, except that they may Not be taken more than 100 feet from the shore line as determined by ordinary high water or, where there is a natural growth of vegetation existing beyond such shore line, not more than 100 feet from such growth or vegetation protruding above the water at the time of taking such birds. Migratory game birds are not permitted to be taken from or by the aid of an automobile airplane, sinkbox (battery), power boat, sail boat, any boat under sail, any floating craft or device of any kind towed by power boat or sail boat.

No live decoys may be used directly or indirectly for the purpose of taking migratory waterfowl. There is no limit to the number of artificial decooys which may be used.

Wood duck, ruddy duck and bufflehead ducks are protected at all times and may not be killed during the open season.

Federal regulations require hunters over 16 years of age to purchase a "duck stamp" at the cost of $1 00 before hunting of migratory waterfowl may be done The Federal law also requires that the hunter place his signature in ink across the face of the stamp before he hunts and that the stamp be on his person at all times.

PHEASANT HUNTING RULES ANNOUNCED

The pheasant hunting regulations as adopted by the Conservation Commission for the season of 1935 provide that Chinese, Mongolian and Ringneck pheasants may be lawfully taken between 12 o'clock noon and 5 o'clock p. m., from November 20 to November 26, both dates inclusive, in Lyon, Osceola, Dickinson, Emmet, Winnebago, O'Brien, Sioux, Clay, Palo Alto, Kossuth, Hancock, Worth, Mitchell, Floyd, Winneshiek, Cerro Gordo, Butler, Grundy, Franklin, Wright, Humboldt, Pocahontas, Buena Vista, Cherokee, Plymouth, Woodbury, Ida, Sac, Calhoun, Howard, Chickasaw, Bremer, Fayette, and all the portions of Monona, Harrison and Pottawattamie counties lying west of Federal Highway No. 75 and all those portions of Pottawattamie, Mills and Fremont Counties lying west of Federal Highway, No. 275.

The daily bag limit is fixed at three pheasants per day for any one person, of which number not more than one may be a hen. The possession limit is fixed at not more than six at any one time after the first open day and of which number not more than two may be hens.

The lawful possession limit of pheasant as well as other game may be held in possession during the open season and for 10 days succeeding the open season. A permit to keep pheasants and other game longer than 10 days after the close of the season may be obtained upon application to the State Conservation Director.

Shipping of Iowa Game Birds Explained

It is unlawful to ship or carry from the State any pheasants or other game unless lawfully taken by a non-resident hunter, who may carry or ship such game as is lawfully taken, to his place of residence as is indicated on his non-resident license

Shipment of pheasants or other game may be made within the State by the resident hunter provided the game has been lawfully taken in accordance with the regulations and any common carrier may accept such shipment when such is offered, if a statement under oath, in duplicate, is furnished by the hunter, showing name and address of hunter, the date and number of his license, where and by what officer issued, the name and residence of the consignee to whom shipment is made, the number and kinds of game contained in the shipment and that the same have not been unlawfully killed, bought or had in possession and are not being shipped for the purpose of sale and that the shipment does not contain a greater number of game as may be shipped in one day.

One copy of the affidavit must be retained by the common carrier for a period of 12 months after shipment and the other must be attached in a secure manner to the package or container of such game.

In addition to all officers authorized to administer such oaths, the agent of any common carrier receiving for transportation any shipment of game is also authorized to administer the required oath.

Possession

The shipment of pheasants or other game by a resident hunter to his own address or to himself within the State or to another person to care for until he returns to his home, does not permit him to have the possession limit with him at the place of hunting. All pheasants shipped by the hunter to himself or others for care are considered in the total possession limit allowed under the regulations. The possession limit is explained as being the number of birds to which the hunter has actual claim regardless of the location of the pheasants or game.

CORN-HOG REFERENDUM WILL BE HELD OCTOBER 26TH

Plans are under way in Hancock County this week for a referendum October 26, to determine the sentiment of corn hog producers toward a production control program in 1936, S. J. Oberhauser announced following his return from a statewide meeting at Iowa State College Monday, October 7th.

Others who attended from this county were Ben. V. Greiman, chm. E. J. Andregg, secretary, Omar J. Maland, treas., J. M. Townsend and Carl Wolwood, committeemen.

A County meeting will be held in the county where the county agent and members of the county committee will present this information to township committemen, who in turn will present the facts to the corn and hog producers in a series of township meetings.

The referendum will be on the question, "Do you favor a corn-hog adjustment program to follow the 1935 program which expires Nov. 30, 1935?" Voting all over the nation will take place on October 26 by ballot at designated polling places in each township. All corn or hog producers eligible to sign a contract—whether producers or landlords, signers or non-signers—will be eligible to vote.

P. T. A. MEETING TUESDAY EVE WAS WELL ATTENDED

The P. T. A. meeting held Tuesday evening was very much enjoyed by the large number present. The meeting was opened by two numbers by the orchestra, under the able direction of Miss Ford. J. J. Cook, the new president, presided. A short business meeting was held after which Mr. Oberhauser, county agent, gave a fine talk from the agricultural outlook. Mr. Missal, popular county auditor, rendered a very nice solo. Dr. Missman talked on the diptheria immunization of school children; Britt and Woden schools are closed by a diptheria epidemic. The Klemme school children will have the privilege of becoming immunized next week.

After the close of the meeting a lunch was served by the committee. The next meeting of the P. T. A. will be held some time in January.

IOWA'S BEST SHOOTER

The best shooter in Iowa is the square shooter and the square shooter is the fellow who is an honest sportsman and a good hunter and one of the first requisites which goes to make up a man of this caliber is one who asks the farmer for permission to hunt on his land.

During the recent trouble in Cuba an American reporter decided to send the account of a street riot to an American paper in Havana. Accordingly he wired:

"Miguel Santiago comma Joaquin Lopez comma Aurelio Garcia comma were killed in the fighting."

The next day the Havana paper came out with the headline:

"Three Comma Brothers Killed in Street Riot."

A Klemme lady who recently bought a car was being examined for a driver's license.

"And what is the black line in the middle of the road for?" she was asked.

"For bicycles?" was the reply.

HEALTH AND GOOD LOOKS DEPEND ON HOW YOU STAND

There's beauty in good posture, declares Jeanette Eaton in the Parents' Magazine, and gives the following three reasons why the average person stands badly. First, comes the possibility of a bodily weakness. Second, part of the clothing may be uncomfortable or badly adjusted. Third, the individual is indifferent to her stoop.

It is one thing to recognize a fault and another to do something about it. Here follow a few practical "don'ts" if we would acquire good posture for ourselves or for our children.

Don't wear high heels when working or walking any distance.

Don't go upstairs clumping or stooping but hold the spine just as straight as you can.

Don't sit with legs crossed—this position puts a great strain on the muscles of back and hips.

Don't go without abdominal support unless you are taking a great deal of exercise.

Don't neglect to supply the right table, chairs and light for yourself and for your boys and girls who have homework to do—and see that their school does it, too.

As for the "dos"—here they are:

Hold your head well, chin up.

Try a little abdominal discipline.

Breathe deeply and often.

Take exercise, not necessarily a daily dozen at a given period but every now and again during the day whenever it is possible to do so.

Fine New Jail
Newspaper Prestige

Who Is the Man?

Not much Ethiopian news. You could hardly expect it with our own white-black prize-ring war competing. Whatever happens, Ethiopian tribesmen will benefit. The emperor, Haile Selassie, is working on reforms, doing away with abuses that Mussolini pointed out and promised to cure.

Arthur Brisbane

He opened a substantial concrete jail outside of Addis Ababa to replace the old jail. There, according to Mr. von Wiegand's cablegram to Universal Service, "live prisoners sometimes remained chained to those who had died for days."

Newspapers in Pennsylvania, 265 of them, have celebrated "press prestige" this week. Governor Earle tells the editors, presumably shivering with delight and surprise, about "the important part that newspapers play in the lives of our people." It is as important as the part played by the people's eyes and ears, and might be taken for granted by now.

Napoleon knew about it when he said that, if he allowed freedom of the press, his power would not last six weeks. Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini could make speeches about it.

The newspaper is a mirror in which the public sees itself, the newspaper's owner and the civilization of the moment. Interesting reflections of that civilization may appear soon in dispatches from Ethiopia and from London in case Mussolini should send his first 500 airplanes in the direction of Buckingham palace, the house of commons, Downing street and the Bank of England, with the message: "What do you think of explosive and mustard gas sanctions?"

The pathetic thing in journalism, as in politics, is the lack of names that the people know. Millions of Americans read newspapers with no faintest conception as to the character of the man whose newspaper they read. It might be called "anonymous nonentity." There are exceptions.

The most important and influential newspaper by far, in proportion to circulation, is the so-called "country newspaper," smaller dailies and weeklies.

Their readers know who runs them, and those readers, not living in city apartments, with a can opener, buy everything from the paint on the roof to the cement in the cellar floor, from the piano and radio in the sitting room to the car in the garage.

Berlin says the Nazi party plans, forcibly, to buy out all Jewish firms and businesses, suggesting that "ambitious Aryan business men will get great bargains." One idea is to allow "Aryan" employees to take over Jewish businesses with government backing. They might take it over, but what about running it? Anybody may buy a business; making it pay is another job.

The Republican committee will have "an important meeting" now, a really big, first-class, "bang-up" meeting in December, to put "pep" into the 1936 campaign.

The question is, "Who is your man?"

Americans want to yell for somebody.

They have not been trained to yell for an idea.

Who is your man? What is his name?

Amusing situation in Europe: England sends her gigantic fleet to the Mediterranean, heaviest dreadnaughts, submarines, airships; parks them around the rock of Gibraltar and, at the entrance of the Suez canal; sends additional soldiers to the Island of Malta.

Mussolini puts his convenient island, off the coast of Greece, in a state of siege, with submarines, airplanes, cutting the Mediterranean in two, isolating the big English fleet in the western end.

Then England, having shown an ardent desire to fight Italy, sends official word that she really hadn't any war with Italy in mind, her feelings were hurt by the Italian newspapers. That is why she sent her fleet.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, John Slattery, seventy-one, and at present "on relief," sits in his one-room "shack," covered with tar paper, wondering what he will do this winter with twin daughters, that his twenty-four-year-old wife added to the earth's population ten days ago. The turkey estimate was made while taking the big-game census.

James K. Polk

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

BACK in 1844 when the Democrats at their national convention in Baltimore nominated James Knox Polk of Tennessee for the Presidency, their opponents, the Whigs, asked somewhat scornfully "Who is Polk?" They soon had their answer, for, as it turned out, he was the next President of the United States.

Mention of him today would probably result in a similar question. For Polk is one of our Presidents who is little more than a name to the average American. Yet the historians who in recent years have been rescuing him from the obscurity into which his name had lapsed assure us that he was more important in the history of the nation than many another Chief Executive who is much better known. Here are some of the elements in his career which make him outstanding:

He was the first "dark horse" in American political history.

He was the first and, thus far, the only speaker of the national house of representatives who went on to the White House.

He was one of two Presidents who made and kept a promise not to seek a second term.

He was the only President who accomplished virtually everything he set out to accomplish when he took office.

He was truly an "empire builder," for during his one administration he added more territory to the United States than did any other President, with the exception of Thomas Jefferson. (Under Polk we acquired 529,189 square miles in the Mexican cession and 280,541 square miles in Oregon by treaty with England, a total of 815,730 square miles as compared to the 827,987 square miles in Jefferson's Louisiana Purchase. However, if the 389,166 square miles acquired by the annexation of Texas, which was formally completed during Polk's administration, is counted in, it brings his total up to 1,204,896 square miles.)

Although Tennessee claims Polk as one of the three men whom it has sent to the White House, he was, like the other two, Jackson and Johnson, a "Tennesseean from North Carolina." He was born in Mecklenburg county just 140 years ago —on November 2, 1795. The original family name was Pollock but among the frontiersmen this was slurred into Poll'k and eventually became Polk.

When James K. Polk was eleven years old the family moved to Tennessee and settled in the town of Columbia. After his first schooling there he entered the Murfreesboro academy from which he was graduated in 1815 and immediately enrolled in the University of North Carolina as a sophomore. Graduated from the university with the highest honors in the class of 1818, Polk began reading law with Felix Grundy of Nashville and from this attorney's office the next step into politics was a natural one.

In 1823 Polk was elected to the general assembly of the state of Tennessee and began the career of public service which during the next quarter of a century would take him to the highest office in the land. In 1825 he was elected to congress and during the next 14 years, first as one of the leaders in the Jackson administration, and from 1835 to 1839 as speaker of the house, he was an important factor in the party battles of that stormy period. From 1839 to 1841 he was governor of Tennessee and three years later he became President.

For an understanding of the forces which resulted in Polk's election to the Presidency, a brief review of political history preceding it is necessary. When Andrew Jackson was ready to lay down the reigns of power which he had held for eight years, he decided that Martin Van Buren of New York, who had helped manage his second campaign and who was later his secretary of state, should be his successor. Although the Whigs, under the leadership of Gen. William Henry Harrison, had put up a valiant fight in the campaign of 1836, Van Buren was elected and the Jacksonian Democracy was destined to rule for four years more in the White House.

But the campaign of 1840 was a different matter. With their shouts of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too," the Whigs swung into their famous "Log Cabin and Hard Cider" campaign with an enthusiasm that had rarely before been displayed. And the popular appeal of this military hero, something of the same sort of appeal that had helped elect Jackson, enabled Harrison to defeat the "Little Magician," Van Buren, and put the Whigs in power for the first time in history.

Then Harrison died, soon after taking office, and John Tyler, the vice president who had been elected as a Whig but who soon proved that he was not a dyed-in-the-wool Whig in principle, became President. As the campaign of 1844 approached, it was apparent that Tyler would not be the Whig candidate but that that mantle would fall upon Henry Clay, Jackson's old enemy who had cast envious eyes at the White House since 1824. Van Buren was the logical Democratic candidate, although his opposition to the annexation of Texas had lessened his popularity in the party.

When the Democratic convention met in Baltimore it was apparent that Van Buren would have a majority of the delegates. And then the second morning of the meeting the celebrated "two-thirds majority" rule was passed. After what seemed a hopeless deadlock between Van Buren and Lewis Cass, Van Buren's name was withdrawn. Then followed the first convention stampede in American history and James K. Polk of Tennessee, who had been a prominent candidate for vice president, was nominated as the first "dark horse" in our political history.

A Tribute from "The First Lady of the Land" ©INTERNATIONAL

Back of his nomination was a little-known figure in American political history, one of those real "history-makers" whom the school history books so often overlook. He was Senator Robert J. Walker of Mississippi who, a month before the convention, had resolved to defeat Van Buren. When both Clay and Van Buren sidestepped the question of the annexation of Texas, Walker boldly demanded not only the annexation of Texas but also the re-occupation of Oregon. It was Walker who put through the two-thirds majority rule, thus depriving Van Buren of the leadership of the party; it was Walker who gave the convention its slogan of "All of Texas; all of Oregon" and it was Walker who engineered the deadlock which resulted in Polk's nomination.

Thus the campaign opened with the Democrats committed to an expansionist policy. James C. Calhoun supported Polk. Daniel Webster, Clay's great rival for the leadership of the Whigs, said little during the campaign. The contest centered about territorial expansion and slavery. Polk, whose platform supported both propositions, found himself in a highly favorable position. Clay, whose prestige and personal popularity were vastly greater than that of his opponent, was put on the defensive at the outset.

So Polk won by an electoral vote of 170 to 105. Upon assuming office he found one of the main planks of his platform already adopted. President Tyler had persuaded the short session of congress in December, 1844, to offer the independent republic of Texas satisfactory terms for entering the Union. These were accepted so all that there remained for Polk to do was to carry out the formalities of receiving the Lone Star commonwealth into the sisterhood of states.

He next turned to the question of Oregon which for the past 50 years had been claimed by both Great Britain and the United States. Polk's offer to England to divide this country by extending the forty-ninth parallel, already the boundary as far west as the Rockies, was rejected. At once the expansionists raised a cry that had already been heard during the campaign. It was "54-40 or Fight!" meaning that America demanded the whole coast as far north as the Russian possessions.

But Polk had no intention of embroiling the country in two wars, for he foresaw that conflict with Mexico was inevitable. So he persisted in his negotiations with England until in June, 1846, a treaty with her was signed establishing the forty-ninth parallel boundary line. For the first time America now had an undisputed foothold on the Pacific coast, given to her by the diplomacy of James K. Polk.

The dispute with Mexico was not so easily settled, however. That country had refused to recognize the independence of Texas and had protested against its annexation by the United States. Moreover, it rejected the southern boundary claimed by the Texans and had been very slow in settling the claims against it for outrages against the person and property of Americans.

These matters, however, might have been settled amicably had it not been for the ambitious extent of the expansionist policy under Polk's administration. Polk wanted California to add to Oregon and extend to our holdings on the Pacific coast and he was willing to buy it. But when he sent John Slidell to Mexico to open negotiations for its purchase, the Mexicans refused even to receive Slidell.

Relations on the border became strained and Mexico began mobilizing for war. At the same time Polk ordered Gen. Zachary Taylor, who was stationed at Corpus Christi on the Nueces river, to advance with his troops to the Rio Grande Taylor did so and closed the trade of the river with his guns. The inevitable collision between the armed forces came on April 24, 1846, when the Mexicans attacked a body of American cavalrymen on the northern side of the Rio Grande. Thereupon Polk, on May 11, 1846, sent a message to congress recommending that war be declared, since "War exists, and notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it."

Among the Abolitionists of the North Polk was denounced as "the mendacious tool of a grasping slavocracy" and some historians have criticized severely his Mexican adventure and declared that the war with Mexico was unjustifiable. He has been accused of trying to foment revolution among the Californians as a preliminary to its annexation and he is said to have been determined to acquire not only California, but New Mexico and other northern provinces of the southern republic by fair means or foul.

But other historians, especially since the publication of his diary, have taken a more kindly view of his actions. One of them declares that it "leaves little question as to Polk's honest dealing with England in Oregon or of equal effort to deal fairly with Mexico on the southern border." Another says "His own perception of the objects of the war was never clouded by doubt or hypocrisy. He would have been glad to buy the northern provinces from Mexico if that had been possible."

As the war progressed the American forces, despite the blundering of their general officers, won victory after victory, and an early end to the conflict became a certainty. Some of the greedier expansionists began shouting for the annexation of the whole of Mexico. But Polk was content with the cession in March, 1848, of more than 500,000 square miles of territory in California and the Southwest for which Mexico was paid $15,000,000. Just as the states which were carved out of the Louisiana Purchase are a perpetual monument to Thomas Jefferson, so are the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, and parts of Wyoming, Colorado, Kansas and Oklahoma a similar memorial to James K. Polk, the "empire builder."

He left the White House in March, 1849, a sick and exhausted man, the first victim of the terrific strain which we put upon the men whom we elect President. Says a historian: "Polk was plainly murdered by an office which the prevailing notions of 'democracy' joined with his own inability to delegate details, had rendered beyond any man's powers. He felt it his duty to be accessible to everyone. He was annoyed and irritated beyond belief by a swarm of office-seekers who kept after him until almost the final day of his term—all manner of people of no importance rambling into the Presidential presence at will to demand petty offices and giving him a piece of their minds on being refused; common drunkards waylaying the President on his walks with pleas for money; wanderers from home calling at the White House for loans of $5 and $10.

"Polk's election to the Presidency was a sentence to confinement at hard labor. In his diaries he speaks again and again of his 'excessive fatigues,' nor did they end in March 1849. On his way home to Nashville by way of Richmond, Charleston, Mobile and New Orleans, he was almost as literally assassinated by his friends as though he had been shot; he was suffering from a digestive disorder requiring plain food and absolute rest, and he was, in plain fact, feted and banqueted to death. He reached Nashville on April 2 and he died on June 15."

His wife, Sarah Childress Knox, is described as "a very handsome woman, whose black hair and dark eyes and complexion were reminiscent of a Spanish donna, a woman who was a sincere and understanding student of political affairs in a day when women were not supposed to know anything about politics and who had a better grasp of public questions than most of the 'statesmen' who thronged the Washington of her day." She was devoted to her husband and as long as she lived she kept his study in their home just as he left it.

On the grounds of what is now the statehouse yard in Nashville she had erected a small marble temple and there his body was placed. On three sides of a monument inside the structure she set down in orderly array the record of his life: "The mortal remains of James Knox Polk are resting in the vault beneath. He was born in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, and emigrated with his father, Samuel Polk, to Tennessee in 1806. The beauty of virtue was illustrated in his life. The excellence of Christianity was exemplified in his death. His life was devoted to the public service. He was elevated successively to the first places in the state and federal governments: A member of the general assembly. A member of congress and chairman of the most important congressional committees. Speaker of the house of representatives; governor of Tennessee and President of the United States. By his public policy he defined, established and extended the boundaries of his country. He planted the laws of the American union on the shores of the Pacific. His influence and his counsels tended to organize the national treasury on the principles of the Constitution and to apply the rule of Freedom to Navigation, Trade and Industry."

Housewife's Idea Box

A Patching Hint

It is a fine idea to make handkerchiefs out of the leftover pieces from the children's cotton dresses. They can use the handkerchiefs to match the dress and later if a patch is needed the handkerchief can be used for patching. It will have been washed as often as the dress and will match as a patch.

Car Held Until Eggs Hatch

When a bird's nest with six eggs was found in a car of coal at a colliery in Gellyceldrim, Wales, recently, the management ordered the car detached from the train, which was about to leave the siding, and be left there until the eggs had hatched and the young birds had flown.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Grange and son, Dorance, drove to Des Moines Sunday where they spent the day and enjoyed dinner in honor of Mrs. Grange's birthday. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Keeper and son, Rayond, accompanied them as far as Ames where the Keepers visited with their daughter and sister, Mrs. Lucas and husband. Mr. Lucas is working at Ames now.

Henry Ludeke, who lives in the Meservey community, was in Klemme last Thursday and was carrying one hand in a sling, a rather unusual decoration for our friend, Henry. The reason for the sling is the fact that Henry got his hand tangled up in a engine, injuring his hand and especially one finger on which the nail had to be removed The injury comes at a bad time for any farmer with the busy season just ahead.

R A. Jorgenson and son, Junior, accompanied by E. J. Arnold and son, Wilbur, and Bob Schneider, drove to Ames Saturday and took in the Iowa State-Nebrasket football game. It was a very good game and much better than the score indicated. Nebraska won 20 to 7, but the Iowa boys outplayed the visitors thruout the entire game, but did not get the "breaks" to put over the touchdowns. Roy Arnold, who is a freshman at Ames this year, returned home with the Klemme men.

"Does yo' take this woman for yo' lawfully wedded wife?" asked the colored parson, glancing at the diminutive, watery-eyed, bowlegged bridegroom, who stood beside 210 pounds of feminine assurance.

"Ah takes mothin," responded the bridegroom. "Ah's bein' cooked."

The mistress of the house heard the bell ring and saw a Chinese hawker standing at the open front door. Quickly retreating, she called out to the maid:

"There's a Chinaman at the door You go, Ella."

This was too much for the Chinese who stuck his head into the hall and shouted indignantly:

"You go 'ella yourself!"

The eminent banker was explaining just how he started in business:

"I had nothing to do, so I rented an empty store and put up a sign, "Bank". As soon as I opened for business a man dropped in and and made a deposit of two hundred dollars. The next day another man dropped in and deposited three hundred dollars. And so, sir, the third day my confidence in the enterprise reached such a point that I put in fifty dollars of my own money."

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE CONTINUES TO GAIN

Bankers Report Nation-Wide Improvement in Attitude Toward Banks—Educational Campaigns Play a Part

NEW YORK.—Ninety-six per cent of over 300 reporting clearinghouses throughout the United States find concrete evidence of favorable turns in public opinion regarding banks, it is shown in the results of a survey made by "Banking," the monthly publication of the American Bankers Association. City and country districts in every state are represented, it is pointed out.

"The outstanding conclusion is that there has been a genuine nation-wide improvement the last few months in the attitude of the public toward its banking institutions," the publication says Statistical evidence on which the bankers base their conclusions which warrant this statement is as follows:

The Evidence

"How do bankers know there has been an improvement in the public attitude? They have certain statistical evidence They have seen their deposits increase substantially in nearly all the cases reported, and tremendously in some cases. Many letters tell of increases of 100 to 300 per cent from the low point of the panic.

"For another thing, they know that fewer people are using safe deposit boxes as a repository for their savings, and that, in many instances at least, postal savings are declining.

"However, many express the view that they could throw out the statistical evidence and still realize that the public is in a better mood where the banks are concerned than before. The best evidence offered on this point, numerous bankers say, is to be found in the acceptance by the public of the newly instituted service charges and the reduced deposit interest rates."

A Summary of the Returns

The statement presents the following summary of the survey:

"We find on breaking up the general classifications of replies to the poll that the 65 per cent of those answering with an unqualified 'yes' represent only a partial measure of the optimistic feeling. Adding the favorable replies included in other groups, (i. e. 'yes' with qualifications, 'no change,' and 'mixed') we find that the vote shows a definitely healthy situation in 84 per cent of the localities reporting; at least some signs of improvement in another 12 per cent; a continuance of unfavorable conditions in 2 per cent, and a change for the worse in another 2 per cent. It is not too much to say that this is substantially 96 per cent favorable."

Reasons for Changed Public Opinion

As to reasons for the changes in public opinion regarding banks reported by the clearinghouses "more than one organization has a word to say about the American Bankers Association advertising and educational material," the magazine says.

It mentions in addition the benefits of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the emergency, improvement in the general business situation, the weeding out of weak banks and the banking moratorium.

"The response to the survey can be put down as encouraging and informative," the magazine concludes. "It holds out the definite hope that with a continuance of a cooperative, educational attitude on the part of the bankers the rest of the journey back to normal may well be completed in the not too distant future."

BANKERS ACTIVE IN SOIL SAVING MOVE

Issue Book Describing Causes, Ravages and Means of Prevention of Erosion

MADISON, Wisc.—Under the title "Protecting Investment Values in Land," the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission has published a booklet dealing with the conservation of soil resources as a pressing national problem.

"Careful estimates indicate that 750,000,000 tons of soil, suspended and dissolved, are carried off to the sea each year by running water," the commission's book declares. "An equal amount removed from its source is left en route This means a total of 1,500,000,000 tons, equal to approximately one ton for each acre of land in this country. The Soil Conservation Service estimates that 35,000,000 acres have been ruined.

"There are 125,000,000 more acres that have lost the valuable topsoil, and it is estimated that still another 100 million acres are being converted into marginal or sub-marginal land, bringing disaster to those trying to eke out a living from erosion enfeebled soil, and threatening ruin to the next generation, since these destructive forces are going on at an increasing rate."

In a chapter devoted to control and preventive measures for soil losses it describes terracing, strip cropping wind erosion control, gully control and the control of losses from leaching.

Other chapters are devoted to soil resources, the toll exacted by soil erosion, methods for keeping soils productive, state and national uses for non agricultural land, forestry in a soil conservation program and wild life in a land use program The booklet describes in detail the marshalling of many forces which is being brought about under the leadership of the Soil Erosion Service to meet this national problem.

Make Jabot Solve "Weighty" Problems

Our stylist had leisure hours in mind when she designed this graceful afternoon frock for the woman of larger proportions. The soft jabot cascades down the bodice in graceful folds, concealing those extra pounds and curves! The bodice gathers in front to a double-pointed yoke, another slenderizing feature with its diagonal lines. Medium-length sleeves puff, then hug the forearm below the elbow. Crepe is a perfect medium for this pattern, but in satin you'd have an all-season "best dress." Do choose sparkling novel buttons and buckle.

Pattern 9339 may be ordered only in sizes, 10, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards 39 inch fabric. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

AS SHE IS SPOKE

Teacher—I am very disappointed in the way your son, Jimmy, talks. Only today he said: "I ain't never went nowhere."

Father—He did? Why, the young whelp has done traveled twice as far as most kids his age.—Successful Farming.

A Friendly Suggestion

"I want to speak to you as one of the plain people."

"Don't do it," replied Farmer Corntossel. "You want to realize that times have changed and a prosperous agriculturist looks on himself as somebody rather special."

Broadened Views

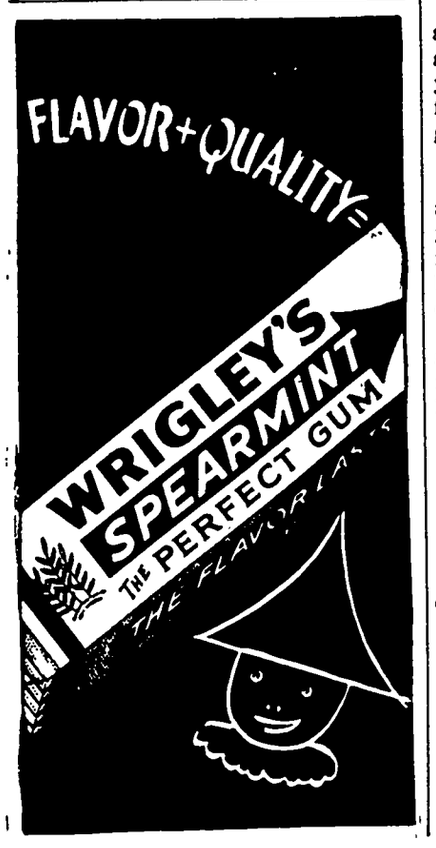
"Do you approve of women in politics?"

"Certainly," said Miss Cayenne. "We should be given every opportunity to discuss public affairs instead of private gossip."

Putting on the Looks

"Why do you always look so gloomy?"

"A gloomy man avoids many a hard luck tale.



A TRUTHFUL MAN

By R. H. WILKINSON

© Associated Newspapers. WNU Service.

DOWN at the village I was told that Old Man Avery was the only man in the hills who could provide me with the information I wanted. Avery had lived in the hill country for nearly 80 years and knew everybody; knew everything that happened too. Moreover, he was a truthful man, not given to unnecessary speech or exaggerations.

And so I toiled up the slope to Avery's cabin and found the old man sitting in the sun before his door. He was smoking a black pipe, and there was nothing hostile in the way he looked at me.

"You're Mr. Avery?" I asked, and smiled.

"Yup," he said. "I'm Mr. Avery."

"I'm from the sheriff's office down at Benton. I'm looking for the man who killed Squint Ruggles."

"Thasso?"

I looked at him closely. Hill folks were strange to me, yet I was familiar with stories told of them, of their slow-thinking ways, and abhorrence of haste, their habitual suspicion of strangers.

I nodded patiently. "At the store they told me you could give me information. I suppose you knew about Ruggles' killing?"

"Yup," he said, "I knew."

"Ruggles," I went on to explain, "was a gangster. He came up here looking for Burt Drake. Drake had won a pot of money one day when he was visiting down in Benton, and Ruggles wanted the money. Do you know Drake?"

"Yup, I know him."

"Relative of yours?"

"Yup."

"Cousin?"

"Nope."

"Maybe a brother-in-law?"

"Nope."

I sighed. This was beginning to be too much of a good thing. I couldn't sit here all day asking questions like a parrot.

"What was he, then?"

"Nephew."

"Oh, a nephew?" I hesitated. Hill folks were curious, I reflected. Stories of their reticence and queerness had not been exaggerated. "Did Drake kill Ruggles?" I asked bluntly.

Avery shook his head. "Nope. T'want him." He produced a jacknife and began carving around the inside of the bowl of his pipe.

"Do you know who killed him?"

"Yup. I know."

I stared at him. "Well, then, for heaven's sake—" I began, and stopped. Impatience and irritation were the very things I had meant to guard against. And so I smiled. "Was the man who killed him a friend of yours?"

"Yup. He was."

"Does he live around here?"

"Yup."

"I'd like to locate him. Can you tell me where he lives, where I can find him?"

"Could if I wanted to."

I stared. It was hot in the sun. The flies were bothersome. My patience was fast reaching the breaking point.

"Perhaps you have a particular reason for not wanting to?"

"Yup. I have."

"Well, by jingoes, what is it? Frankly, I've got to locate the man. And down at the store they said you were the only one who could give me the information. Now, if you don't want to talk, I'm up a tree, so to speak."

"Looks like you are, at that."

I stood up. "Mr. Avery, I can't waste any more time sitting here asking you a lot of fool questions. Are you or are you not going to tell me where I can find the man who killed Squint Ruggles?"

"I ain't."

"Well, I'll be—" I turned angrily away, started down the trail. Fifty yards away I stopped. An idea had flashed into my mind. At first I couldn't believe it possible, but it seemed the only logical explanation.

I turned. Old Man Avery was still sitting on the bench in the sun. He had refilled his pipe and lighted it. I came back to him.

"Listen," I said. "Do you know why it is that I want to get in touch with the man who killed Squint Ruggles? Do you think it's because I want to bring him back with me, arrest him?"

Old Man Avery looked at me and for the first time the expression on his face changed.

"Ain't it?" he asked.

I laughed. "Hardly. I've got an envelope in my pocket that contains $500. It's reward money for Ruggles' killer. Didn't you know he was a gangster, wanted for murder? Hadn't you heard that there was a reward offered for his capture, dead or alive?"

"Nope," said Old Man Avery, "I hadn't."

"Well, it's a fact. And that's why I'm up here, that's why I'm asking you all these questions. Now if you know where I can locate the man, please let me have the information and directions to his house. It's hot here. The flies are bad, and I'd like to be getting on home?"

Old Man Avery tapped out his pipe. He looked up at me and the wrinkles in his face began to deepen. I divined that he was smiling.

"So that's how it is?" he said.

"Yes," I agreed impatiently, "that's how it is. Now, will you please—" I stopped, looked at him curiously. "Say," I said, remembering in a flash the scene down at the store, and suddenly half aware of the reason for it, "was it you? Did you kill Squint Ruggles, the gangster?"

The wrinkles in Old Man Avery's face grew even deeper. A dry cackle escaped his lips.

"Yup," he said. " I did."

Arizona Ghost Town Seen Key to Lost Salado Tribe

A prehistoric "ghost town" on the outskirts of Phoenix is believed to hold the key to the mysterious disappearance of the Salado people, a highly intelligent, powerful tribe of Indians who once controlled the rich Salt River valley, observes a Phoenix, Ariz., United Press writer.

The Salados, who dug with stone tools 125 miles of irrigation canals and built 22 villages in the valley, vanished about 700 years ago. Where they went; if their descendants are still living, or lost their identity through intermarriage with other tribes, are questions archeologists seek to answer.

Excavations at Pueblo Grande, largest of the "ghost towns," and the only municipal archeological park project in the United States, indicate that the Salados may have been "flooded" out of the valley by a continually rising water table which eventually made their fields worthless.

Odd S. Halseth, archeologist in charge of the Pueblo Grande work, said the Salados apparently had been forced to abandon village after village and finally the valley itself because they were unable to lower the water tables which their irrigation had raised.

Abandonment of Pueblo Grande, he said, apparently was sudden. Without pack animals, obliged to carry on their backs everything they took with them, the Salados were forced to abandon their helpless old people and many of their helpless infants, leaving them to die as food supplies dwindled.

Discovery of skeletal burials near the top of the adobe walls which formed Pueblo Grande lends credence to this belief, Halseth said.

Ordinarily, the Salados practiced cremation, as did most other prehistoric southwest Indian tribes. Burial pots, containing charred human bones, have been found in nearly all villages. Usually, Halseth explained, the pots were buried in or near the village walls. Almost never, he said, did the Indians inter their dead.

The Pueblo Grande excavations disclosed 12 skeletal burials near the tops of the walls. Of the skeletal remains four were those of adults of advanced age, while eight were of infants three or four years or younger.

Of the infant burials, three were of skulls only. No other parts of the bodies were found, and there was no evidence that those other parts had been removed after burial. Each tiny skull was accompanied by the usual burial bowls and trinkets.

Were those who remained after the exodus forced into cannibalism or were the children sacrificed and decapitated to appease angry gods who sent the ground waters to flood away the crops?

Those questions, Halseth said, cannot be answered from the evidence found at the Pueblo Grande excavations. He said, however, that there is plenty of evidence that other southwestern and Mexican Indians practiced human sacrifices and, occasionally, cannibalism.

Presumably, as they weakened, the abandoned helpless buried their dead in the walls, instead of resorting to the laborious cremation rites they usually observed. Possibly, as they weakened further, they were driven to cannibalism.

But the greater mystery, the destination and fate of the main body of the Salados, remains unsolved.

Steak 10,000 Years Old

Ancient steak reputed to be 10,000 years old furnished a delicious dinner at Stockholm. The dish was composed of steak cut out of a mammoth which had been dead 10,000 years. Professor Lindbergh, head of the Swedish expedition, who recently returned from North Taiga, Siberia, made the announcement. The scientists discovered the carcass of a mammoth of the ante-diluvian epoch, perfectly preserved in the ice. After a thorough investigation the animal was declared still to be in perfectly edible condition. Accordingly it was cut up, roasted and devoured by the hungry members of the party, who found this record cold storage meat delicious.

"Koreshan Cosmognoy"

"Koreshan cosmognoy" teaches that the world is a shell or hollow sphere; that the surface upon which we dwell is concave, not convex. They assert they have proved this point by a geodetic instrument known as rectilineator, which shows that the surface of the earth curves upward at the rate of about 8 inches to the mile."

Stockman Raises Sheep for Fur, Not for Wool

Texas Rancher Makes Success of Karakul Species.

Dunder, Texas.—Raising sheep that bear fur, not wool, constitutes the hobby of Alex Albright, seventy-three-year-old Archer county stock breeder, who owns the only herd of karakul sheep of commercial consequence in the whole United States. And from that herd of Asiatic sheep he each year sends to Eastern markets thousands of dollars' worth of fine fur.

The history of this unusual industry dates back thousands of years. The karakul-fur bearer is an ancient member of the sheep family. History recounts that conquering tribes came into the independent kingdom of Bokhara, bordering on old Russia, thousands of years ago, bringing their sheep with them. Archeologists have dug up mummies buried for 3,000 years that were found to be wearing this lamb's fur—in perfect condition.

Regard Sheep as Sacred.

The breed takes its name from the little town of Karakul, not far from the Aral sea, in Turkestan, Asia. For centuries the fur of the sheep grown in this little primitive community was known to traders and furriers the world over as the finest to be obtained. The pure karakuls were found only on the ranches of the Bokharan noblemen. Mixed breeds are found throughout that part of Asia, the Afghans, the Astrachans and the Krimmers. The Mahomatan tribes of Bokhara have a sacred regard for these full-blooded karakuls. They guard them zealously, and this fact, together with the knowledge that the karakul breed is rapidly becoming extinct in their domain, caused extraordinary difficulties when it was first proposed to transplant a flock of the sheep to America.

The flock which Dr. C. C. Young brought to Texas in 1908 was the first full-blooded karakul sheep ever taken out of the Province of Bokhara and out of Russia. That flock of 15 head was brought to Holliday, Texas, also in Archer county, not far from Mr. Albright's present ranch. Doctor Young's personal knowledge of the people with whom he was dealing went a great way toward his ultimate success in carrying out his plans.

Albright Takes Hold.

Dr. Young did not continue his experiment long and Mr. Arbright took up the project of raising the fur-bearing sheep. It was 25 years ago that Alex Albright made his first effort to import karakul stock into the United States in order to bring new blood to his then small flock. He, too, found that he must overcome the import laws of his own country first, then break down the shyness of the herdsmen of Bokhara, who recoiled from the idea of allowing their sheep to be taken to foreign lands.

"When I say that raising karakul sheep is the most profitable industry the stockmen could enter I have only to state a few facts," Mr. Albright said. "Ordinary wool is now bringing around 20 cents a pound, and has not greatly varied from that figure in a year. As my invoice shows, last June 15, I sold on the New York market fur pelts from 280 karakul sheep, $2,346.12 net to me. That alone clearly substantiates my claim that good fur-producing ewes can show more profit than a thousand head of any other breed of sheep. Karakul lamb pelts for fur must be taken the first three or four days after birth."

Model Soviet Plane Makes 7-Mile Flight

Moscow.—What is claimed to be a world record for flights by model airplanes was established by Valya Kupreichuk at a recent aviation show.

His miniature plane ascended to a height of 2,900 feet and was seen for 32 minutes. After this it was lost from view. The flier who took off to look for it found it two days later, undamaged, seven miles from the starting point.

Germany's Latest Naval Weapon Is "Death Boat"

Kiel, Germany.—Germany's latest naval war weapon—the "death boat"—made its first public appearance here during the maneuvers of the Reich's fast-growing new navy.

The "death boats," so named because they not only can deal death rapidly but also because their crews brave death with little chance of escape, are combination torpedo-speedboats recently perfected and reported capable of reaching a speed of more than 60 knots per hour.

Each of the small speedboats is equipped with a deadly torpedo and all are based on a "mother ship" filled with torpedoes and fuel. The naval strategy of the "death boats" in warfare is to rush right up to enemy warships, discharge their torpedoes point blank and then speed away—if they can—from under the guns of the attacked craft.

Discover Skeleton of Prehistoric Gangster

Belgrade.—In a prehistoric grave discovered near Vincovtzi, Jugoslavia, an enormous skeleton of a man has been found wearing stone "irons"—the arms were fixed through two holes in a huge block of stone and the legs through holes in another block.

The skeleton may have belonged to some gangster of prehistoric times who died in prison.

Planes Assist in War Upon Liquor Ships

Rum Runners Now Transfer Cargoes at Sea.

Washington.—Customs officials are mapping plans for a decisive campaign against the latest ruse of rum runners who have shifted their bases to the high seas.

Stripped of their former bases by co-operative moves of the United States, France, Newfoundland, British Honduras and Guatemala, smugglers are now chartering vessels to transport liquor cargoes from Europe for delivery to smaller ships at sea.

This was disclosed in reports from customs officials to executives of the Treasury department.

A large fleet of planes is operating from seven scattered coastal points, spotting doubtful vessels 50 miles out at sea. These planes are in constant touch with revenue cutters and land stations.

Tightened restrictions on Atlantic islands which previously had based large numbers of rum running boats, have driven the smugglers to bold measures. Some in recent months have even run small liquor vessels into large American ports, on the chance they would slip by.

One by one, the choicest operating bases of the rum runners have vanished. Mariel, Cuba; Belize in British Honduras, Puerto Barrios in Guatemala, St. John's island in Newfoundland and the French colony, St. Pierre et Miquelon, each has been closed under agreements with their governments.

Within the next two months, it was indicated, the drive against the chartered ships is expected to be felt. Though the campaign may later be extended to Pacific ports, rum smuggling on that coast does not appear so heavy.

Cattle Men Are Aroused as Rustling Increases

Des Moines.—Iowa cattle men, faced with the loss of valuable stock from increasing night raids by modern cattle rustlers, are contemplating formation of bands of vigilantes to combat the thieves.

Rustling—on a larger scale than Iowa has experienced since the turn of the century—has broken out recently and appears to be on the increase. Records at the state bureau of investigation disclosed that 133 head of cattle have been purloined from Iowa farms during the first eight months of the year.

In the pioneer days of the state, the cattle rustler was a daring figure who operated on horseback in large bands.

The modern rustler uses a light, fast truck and takes a minimum of chance. His booty, aided by processing taxes and scarcity of beef, daily grows more valuable.

Operating with a "finger man," the modern rustling crew spots herds which graze in pastures far away from the farm house.

In the night stillness the crew, usually composed of only two or three men, snip an opening in barbed wire fences and drive their truck through. Then they herd the cattle into their truck and speed away.

As yet no offender has been lynched and it is not believed such an extreme would be resorted to if a vigilante organizaton were formed. But if the menace continues, Glen Schmidt, chief of the investigation bureau, said, there is a "distinct possibility farmers will take the law into their own hands and mete out some kind of punishment."

Court's Job Is to Find Definition for Rubbish

Bucyrus, Ohio.—When is rubbish rubbish is the controversial question before the courts here.

For ten years there has been a pile of bricks and stones half a block in the main street in downtown Bucyrus. It belongs to Attorney Alfred S. Leuthold. The city council ordered him to move it or show cause why. Leuthold promised he would, and then changed his mind.

When the city fathers learned, they ordered city trucks to remove the pile. Leuthold stopped that with a temporary injunction, and now the court must decide when rubbish is rubbish.

Guard Against Fleas

Fleas will breed in carpets, cracks in the floor or any other suitable place where the eggs may drop. It takes only 17 days from the time an egg is laid to produce a flea in good biting condition. The insects are renowned in scientific circles as the carrier of many diseases. The dog flea sometimes carries eggs of a tapeworm, which when swallowed causes worms in dogs. Occasionally tapeworms in children are caused by dog fleas accidentally getting into the mouths of the children.

To guard against flea infestation of dwellings animal pets should be frequently dusted with any insect powder made from dried pyrethrum flowers. This is harmless to animals and human beings. If a house becomes infested the rugs, cracks in floor and other likely breeding places should be sprayed thoroughly with any of the liquid spray insecticides.

Storage Solves Problem of Surplus for Gardeners

Each year the average gardener has a surplus problem. His garden normally produces more vegetables during the summer than he and his family can consume.

This surplus—of little value in the summer—can be used during the winter in preparing a variety of tasty and wholesome dishes if the extra vegetables are properly stored in cellars, attics, or other suitable places. Storing of vegetables also lightens the annual canning work.

Beets, late cabbage, carrots, celery, onions, parsnips, potatoes, sweet potatoes, salsify, pumpkins, squash, and turnips may be stored in their natural condition. Beans of various kinds, including the limas, may be dried and stored.

A half-acre garden, according to horticulturists of the United States Department of Agriculture, will, if properly cared for, produce enough vegetables for year-around use by the average family.

Cellars containing a furnace usually are too warm and dry for storing root crops, but a room may be partitioned off in one corner or end of the cellar and temperature controlled by means of outside windows. Outdoor cellars may be built at a low cost.

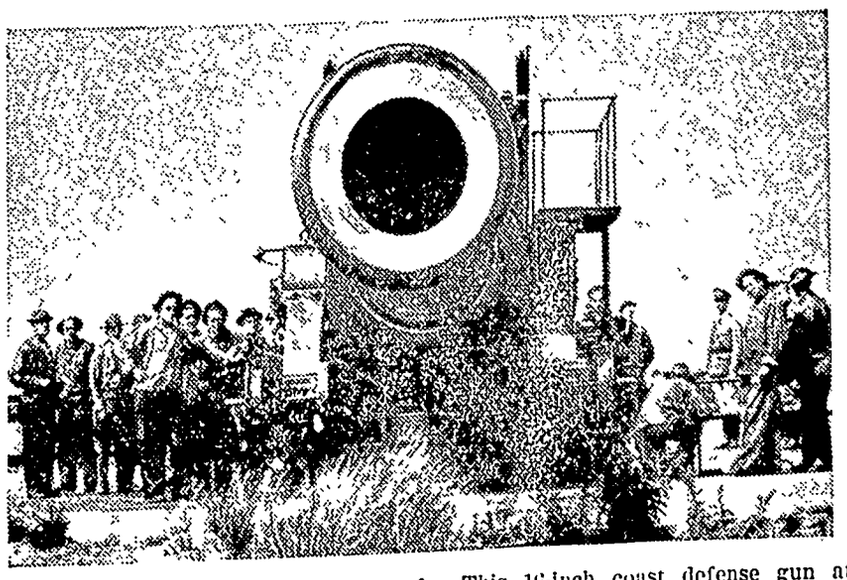
Big Gun That Broke a Long Silence



Private de la Hunt was deeply chagrined about that one miss that spoiled an otherwise perfect shooting record. However, as long as Uncle Sam's devil dogs can shoot 99 targets out of 100 the enemy had better be doggone snappy in getting out of the way, don't you think? It'd be healthier for him.

This 16-inch coast defense gun at Fort Tilden, Long Island, broke a silence of 12 years the other day when in a firing test it sent a 2,100 pound projectile 15 miles out to sea. America, in her program of strengthening the national defenses from all angles, wants to be sure her guns can still talk.

GARNER SALES COMPANY HAVE FILED INCORPORATION PAPERS

The Garner Sales Company last Thursday filed Articles of Incorporation at the Hancock County Recorder's office. This is the Company which organized and built the new livestock sales pavillion at Garner where sales are held every Thursday. The officers are E. C. Buntenbach, Klemme, President; Harvey H. Wood, Clear Lake, vice-pres and secretary; R. D. Robbins, Clear Lake, Treasurer.

The sales pafillion is conveniently located on two important highways, No. 18 and No. 69. The sales held each Thursday have attracted a large number of buyers.

NOTICE

All farmers are urged to co-op rate with the Board of Supervisors in seeing that all weeds along the highways are cut immediately. This will save the county consderable expense n snow removal and save this money for road improvelte ment.

WHY DO BABIES LAUGH? In fact, why does anyone laugh? Read what science has to say about it in The American Weekly, the Magazine Distributed with NEXT SUNDAY'S CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME!

What are you afraid of?

Everyone you meet these days seems to be afraid of something. Afraid of being sick, afraid of losing their job or their husband . . or perhaps of not finding one, afraid of their income tax . . afraid it's going to rain . . afraid it's not going to rain . . afraid of the boss . . afraid to ask . . afraid to do . . afraid to live . . afraid to die.

I know of a woman who is in mortal fear of FEAR. Fear does terrible things to her. She's afraid of being afraid of her dentist, afraid an automobile will run over her child, afraid her child will catch some dreadful illness. She's mostly afraid of herself and for herself.

What is this thing fear, that seems to have so many of us in its clutches? I know what it is. It's wrong training . . . wrong seeing . . . wrong thinking. A prekindergarten teacher told me not long ago that teachers were being taught today to eliminate the word fear as far as possible from the child's vocabulary . . . both literally and figuratively. I believe that is a wonderful thing. Most of us have been taught to be afraid. We were given fear complexes from the time we were tiny tots . . . put in dark closets . . . told stories of giants and witches and wicked old step-mothers and so on.

Children should be taught to be UNAFRAID—physically, mentally, and morally—to meet issues as they come. They should be taught to meet calmly the little annoyance, bravely the real trials and hardships . . UNAFRAID . . of anything that might happen.

How wonderful it would be to instill into human being a sense of safety, of security, of serenity and of acceptance of things as they come. Today's life is entirely too crowded with fears, because most of us have been educated in fear.

We need to make our homes and our schools training camps for courage. We need to "about face" and stop fearing, because the price of fear comes to high. Fear brings no assets . . only liabilities.

LIBERTY FARMERS UNION MET MONDAY, OCTOBER 7TH

The Farmers' Union meeting of the Liberty Local, which was held in the Liberty school No. 7, on Oct 7th, was very well attended.

Mr William Boles of Des Moines was the principal speaker of the evening. His address, which dealt with farm problems, was very interesting and full of educational facts Although Mr. Boles is just a young man, he is very well posted on all farm problems as he started working with his grandfather, Milo Reno, when just a boy.

County superintendent Baggs was also a guest. He gave a short talk concerning education.

Mrs. Chas. Ax and Mrs Howard Spitler concluded the program by singing a Farmers' Union song which Mrs. Ax composed.

The next meeting of the Liberty local will be held Monday, Nov 4, at Liberty school No. 7.

MRS HARRY GIBBS ENTERTAINS CRADLE ROLL AND MOTHERS

Mrs. Harry Gibbs, who is at the head of the Cradle Roll department of the Klemme Methodist Sunday School, entertained the members of the Cradle Roll and their mothers at the Church Friday afternoon.

The program included a ocvl solo by Mrs. P. W. Johnson; a talk on "The Indian Home" by Mrs Zabilka; a piano solo by Mrs. Stewart Hevilin and a talk on 'The Value of the Cradle Roll Department" by Rev. Wm. Zablika.

Following the program the guests were seated at tables in the dining room of the church where places were arranged for fifty-nine. The tables were prettily decorated with streamers for the occasion. Home made ice cream and two kinds of sake were served by the hostess.

AUXILIARY COUNTY MEETING TO BE HELD IN KLEMME

LELA WELKER AND CLIFFORD MONTGOMERY WERE MARRIED

Mrs. Lela Welker, daughter of Wm. Bachman, and Clifford Montgomery, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Montgomery of Hutchinson, Minn., were married Tuesday, October 8th at 2:30 p. m. by Rev. Wm. Zabilka at the Klemme Methodist Parsonage.

About thirty-five relatives were entertained at a wedding dinner, served at the Bachman home at 6:30. In the evenng a reception was held in honor of the newlyweds at the Goodell hall where dancing was enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery will make their home in Klemme for the time being.

50 PERSONS DIE NEEDLESSLY FROM DIPTHERIA EACH YEAR

Although the death rate from diptheria in Iowa has been reduced greatly in recent years, it still is possible to save the lives of approximately 50 persons who now die from the disease each year, it was announced by the State health department Saturday.

The death rate per 100,000 population has been reduced from 9.7 in 1923, when the immunization program was started, to 1.6 last year. Previous to the program, the average annual death rate was 242 whereas in the last five years an average of 50 have died annually.

Since 1927 a yearly average of 27,840 children have received complete immunization treatments against the disease, it was reported. It was revealed, however, that less progress is being made in preventing diptheria in the large cities than in the rural areas.

FIRED FARMHAND SHOOTS DUNCAN WOMAN

Victim Was Taken To Mason City For Treatment

Duncan:—Mrs. Albina Urich, 30, was resting easily today in her home after being shot through the right breast Friday night by Francis Martineck, 21 year old farm hand employed since January by Louis Urich, Mrs. Urich's brother-in-law.

According to information received by Sheriff E. P. Hanson, Urich discharged the hired man Thursday. Martineck then went to Garner and purchased a 32 caliber revolver.

Returning to the farm Friday night Martineck fired four shots. One struck Mrs. Urich. Martineck also fired at Maxine Urich, daughter of his former employer, but missed her, according to his confession to the sheriff, by whom he was taken into custody.

Mrs Urich was taken to the Mercy hospital in Mason City where she received treatment, and later brought back home.

FOOTBALL GAME AT GARNER FRIDAY EVE UNDER LIGHTS

Klemme fans who are interested in football can expect to see a good game at Garner Friday evening when the strong Clear Lake High School plays the Garner High school under the lights.

The night games at Garner have been attracting a large crowd and quite a few Klemme football fans have taken in the games. The kick-off is at 8:00 o'clock.

Comes Here From Menno, S. Dak.; Expects To Arrive Early December

The Rev. Wm. Huenemann of Menno, S. D., has accepted a call to the pastorate of Peace and Zion Reformed congregations of Ell township and Garner, and with his family, is expected to take over his new work the first part of December. For the past several weeks or since the removal of Rev. C. A. Schmid to his new pastorate at Berne, Ind., Peace and Zion congregations have had no regular pastor. The Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch of the Klemme Reformed congregation, has served the congregations as supply pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Huenemann and his family are by no means strangers in this community. They have in the past made numerous trips to this section to visit relatives, and the Rev. Mr. Huenemann has occupied both Peace and Zion pulpits in days gone by. Rev. Mr. Huenemann is an uncle of Victor Huenemann and Mrs. Ray Haberkamp, both of Garner and bears the same relationship to Mrs. Ferdinand Lemke of near Meservey.

Definite infomation as to the age of the new pastor, how long he has been in the ministry, number of inmates of his household, etc., was not obtainable from the friend from whom what facts we have presented here, were gathered.

The parsonage at Peace Reformed property, located about three miles south of Garner, will be used by the Rev. Mr. Huenemann and his family. We are informed that the congregations will at once begin the task of moderinizing this home and have it ready for the new pastor and his family by December 1st or thereabouts.—Garner Leader.

TRAPPING SEASON WILL OPEN 5 DAYS EARLY IN IOWA

The Iowa trapping season will get under way five days earlier this year, the state conservaton commission announced in making public its new rules and regulatons.

The regulatons provide that badger, mink, raccoon, skunk, opossum civet and muskrat may be taken between No. 10 and Jan. 10, both inclusive. The 1934 season started Nov. 15.

Applies to State

The open season applies to the entire state except that muskrat may not be trapped along the Mississippi rived in an area described as: East of the C M. & St. P., railroad running through Allamakee, Clayton, Dubuque and Jackson counties along the Mississippi and between the Iowa-Minnesota line and the Jackson-Clinton county line on the Mississippi river.

Red or gray fox may be taken at any time. Beaver and otter are protected through a continuous closed season under the new regulations.

Colony Traps Prohibited

The commission pointed out that while trapping is permitted the regulations make unlawful injury to a muskrat house, or destruction of a skunk, raccoon or beaver den. Where damage to property is involved the property owner must notify the commission of intention to destroy a den.

Shooting with a shotgun on spearing of beaver, mink, otter or muskrat is prohibited. The regulations also prohibit the use of colony or box traps and figure four traps in the taking of fur bearing animals.

FIRST SNOW OF THE SEASON

A light, drizzling rain last Wednesday evening turned into snow, the first of the season. At Garner two inches of snow fell which covered the ground. In Klemme a trace of snow was noticeable. The weather turned warmer following the light snow fall and ideal, warm fall days are being enjoyed.

CALCIUM NEEDED IN DAILY MENU

Growing Boys and Girls Require It Regularly.

By EDITH M. BARBER

DO YOU know how to check your daily diet for its calcium content? It is essential that you have a liberal supply, and even more important that the children of the family get what they need.

Growing boys and girls need from three to four times as much calcium in proportion to their weight as do adults. Calcium is responsible, although not entirely, for producing good bones and teeth. It helps to regulate the way our blood flows and clots. Nowadays before a tonsil operation, it is customary to test the blood for its clotting properties. If these are not satisfactory, calcium salts are given the prospective patient.

The food which is most liberally supplied with calcium is milk which, of course, includes cheese, one of the most important milk products. Ice cream will also contribute some. Some vegetables and fruits provide it in less liberal amounts. Cauliflower, figs, dried beans, celery, string beans, cabbage, carrots, spinach, oranges, potatoes, eggs, whole wheat and bran contribute worthwhile amounts.

A child who gets a quart of milk a day will not suffer from a calcium shortage.

Spinach Ring.

½ peck spinach
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon grated onion
½ cup milk
3 eggs, separated
Pepper
Salt
½ teaspoon nutmeg

Wash, pick over and cook spinach until tender, about ten minutes. Drain and chop or put through meat grinder. Heat butter, stir in flour, then the milk. When smooth and thick, stir gradually into the beaten egg yolks. Add spinach and seasoning, grated onion and nutmeg. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of eggs, place in a well-greased ring or melon mold, set in a pan half filled with boiling water, and bake 20 minutes.

Nut Muffins.

1 cup whole wheat flour
1 cup white flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
4 tablespoons brown sugar
1 egg
¾ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
4 tablespoons shortening
½ cup chopped walnuts or pecans

Mix dry ingredients. Beat egg, add milk and melted shortening. Add to dry ingredients. Add chopped nuts. Bake for 25 minutes in a moderate oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit).

Baked Eggs With Spinach.

Into each greased individual "au gratin" dish put one tablespoonful of chopped spinach. Cover the eggs with white sauce, into each cup of which has been stirred one-half cupful of grated parmesan cheese.

Russian Canape.

6 finger lengths bread
Butter
3 anchovy fillets
¼ cup sour cream
3 sour pickles
2 tablespoons minced onion
Salt and pepper

Butter the bread before slicing. Trim crusts and cut into oblong pieces. Mince the pickle and spread on the bread. Whip cream, season, add onion, and spread on canapes. Split fillets and use as garnish.

Tomatoes With Rice and Cheese.

1 cup rice
3 cups tomato pulp
2 tablespoons butter
¼ pound grated cheese
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
1 minced onion

Put uncooked rice mixed with tomatoes and seasonings into shallow pan, dot with butter and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) one hour or until rice is done. Cover with cheese and brown.

Cheese Biscuits.

¾ cup grated cheese
¾ cup flour
1 egg yolk
1 cup butter
Cayenne

Mix the cheese and flour, then cut into this mixture the butter or butter substitute, add a little cayenne pepper and moisten with the egg yolk. Roll thin and cut into tiny rounds. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees F.) 20 minutes.

Cheese Straws.

1 cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon butter
Paprika
1 cup soft bread crumbs
1 cup grated cheese
¼ cup milk

Mix dry ingredients, rub in the butter, add the crumbs and cheese. Add milk to make a dough, knead until smooth, then roll one-fourth inch thick. Cut in strips and bake until light brown in a hot oven (450 degrees F.)

Cheese Fritters.

2 cups corn meal mush
¼ cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup grated cheese
1 egg

Mix mush with flour, sifted with the baking powder and salt. Add the cheese and lastly the egg. Drop by spoonfuls on a hot griddle and fry on both sides.

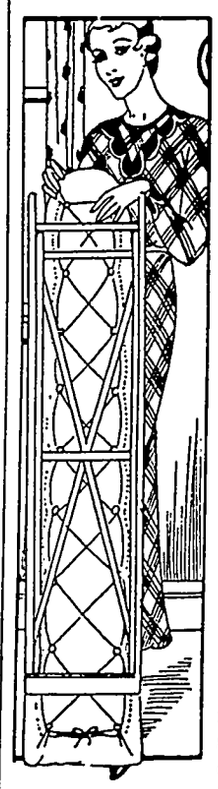
The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

IRONING boards must be properly covered if the ironing done on them looks expert. Irons must be in best condition also, and be of the right temperature. With electric irons the heat is intermittent as with the ordinary irons heated from without instead of within themselves. With the electric iron this is because of the need of alternating current. With the ordinary flat iron the change of temperature comes with the cooling of it during use, and the increase of heat when it is exchanged for one from the stove. The great advantage in using an electric iron in hot weather is that no fire is needed. The current of heat from the iron does not permeate the room and the temperature can be kept lower than when a fire must be going. With either kind of iron the work can be equally as well done.



An ironing board must be well padded. The padding must be without seams, and be in one piece. It must be long enough to extend the full length of the board and be wide enough to reach from side to side of the widest part of it. Boards can be padded with material at hand or pads can be bought. Unless they fit your particular size of board they are inadequate. One pad may do, but two pads are preferable. The more give there is to the board when ready for use the better, up to a certain point. Too deep padding retards ironing.

Extra Padding.

If extra padding is needed for ironing embroideries, etc., which should be in relief, use a pad of soft cloth, such as a Turkish towel. The reason why the board must be free from seams, from patches and creases, is that each one will make its imprint on the ironed garments, and mar the perfection of the work.

The board must be straight and even. A warped board or a split one should be discarded, unless mended to even it. Sometimes planing a warped board will renew its usefulness, and strips screwed underneath the board may restore a broken one. The end of the board over which garments are positioned must be smooth and free from pins, tacks, or anything that might catch materials.

Irons should be waxed occasionally to make them glossy smooth. An ordinary candle end will do the job as successfully as will other lubricants. If starch gets onto the iron, use a knife held with blade flat against the iron and scrape and then rub with wax. Always rub the freshly waxed iron well on paper or a cloth before ironing clothes with it as the wax will make grease marks.

Thoughts and Actions.

Few persons understand that there is a time of reaping of the seeds of thought and action which they sow. Youth is the lavish time for sewing, mature years are those for garnering. Not all seed is sown in youth. We are continually strewing our pathways with seeds, all of which we evidently consider will bloom in beauty. Many of these little seeds, however, block up our way with rank weeds that have thorns and dense growth, through which it is difficult to plough our way. Not all seeds are those of good or bad actions. Many are of thoughts, apprehensive thoughts that tangle our ideas, worrying thoughts that cause sleeplessness and frequently bring illness in their wake, jealous thoughts that rend our hearts and bring unhappiness to us and often to those we love. The reaping is as sure as the sowing.

"No one will know, if I do this or that," so youth and adults often reason. Yet in time the effect of what was sown is plainly to be seen in the lines of a face, in the look in the eye, in the bloated visage, or the loose mouth, or it may be in the reverse, and loveliness of character shines forth with its mellowing grace that illuminates a face even though it may have far from handsome features. We all know faces of these descriptions and we realize it is not chance that causes the repulsive or the charming look. Each is evidence of the seeds the person has sown.

Tip From England

Alfred C. Bossom, in the London Daily Telegraph, calls attention to the fact that practically all building materials deteriorate when exposed to atmosphere unless protected by some applied coating. "Cost of reasonable maintenance is negligible compared with dilapidations due to prolonged neglect," says Mr. Bossom. "Good paints properly applied retard or banish deterioration, and in no other aspect of buildings is false economy more expensive. As three-quarters of paint cost goes for labor, the advantage of highly durable paints is apparent."

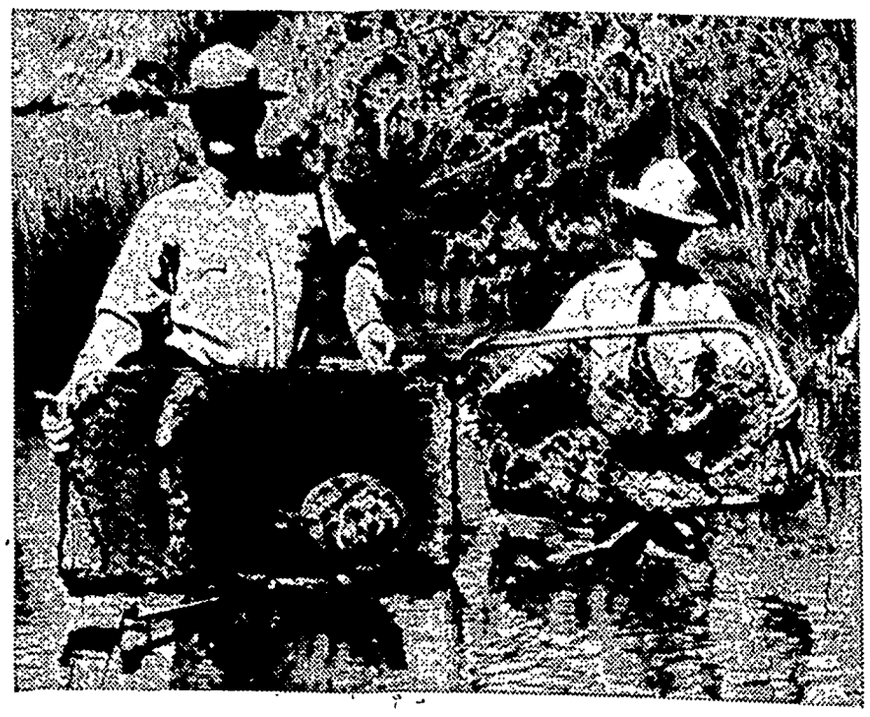
Beavers Get Jobs Building Dams



Thousands of beavers are now being trapped in the Northwest, through the co-operation of the United States forest service, United States biological survey, and the state police. The beavers, which farmers say dike up their irrigating canals, destroy fruit trees, and cause general havoc, are being transplanted to their more natural surroundings in the national forests. Here they are expected to work at their tasks of building dams in streams, which will stop erosion and increase pasture land. The photograph shows beavers caught in wire traps that do not injure them.

"COME HITHER"

By BARBARA A. BENEDICT

© Associated Newspapers.—WNU Service.

IT WAS funny, Chloe thought, quarreling with a man only two weeks after you met him. Why, two weeks hardly gave you a chance to get acquainted. No, you didn't quarrel with a man as soon as that, unless—. But that was silly, even considering that she'd fallen in love. Very silly indeed. Two weeks and in love? Ridiculous!

Chloe tried to give her attention to Felix Burgess, who sat beside her at the wheel of the roadster. But this was hard, because a picture of Max Hayford, the man with whom she'd quarreled, kept projecting itself in her mind. This was annoying. Felix had asked her to go to the country club dance, and she had accepted. She ought at least to try and act civil toward him.

Accepting Felix's invitation was the first step in putting Max Hayford in his proper place. Max would be at the country club dance, too, and when he saw her there with Felix he'd realize that he couldn't call her a little snob and get away with it. He'd ask her to dance, or cut in anyway, and Chloe knew exactly how she'd act when this happened. Of course she was going to let him make up. Even though she hated the man. Because if she didn't, how could she ever expect to teach him the lesson he deserved?

Chloe squirmed in her seat, recalling for the hundredth time that awful moment when Max Hayford had called her a snob and a flirt. Whom did he think he was talking to like that, anyway? Oh, she'd bring him to his knees with a vengeance!

The country club was crowded when Chloe and Felix arrived. They were late, which was Chloe's idea, as she liked to arrive places after every one else was there. She liked to stand in the doorway for a moment, looking around sort of casually, seemingly unconscious but wholly aware that most everybody had turned to stare at her admiringly. Oh, Chloe knew she was pretty—about the prettiest girl who had ever come to Shore Haven. Chloe stood in the doorway, as per her custom, and looked around, but she didn't see Max Hayford, and this was annoying, because she had expected that Max would be there waiting for her, even standing near the entrance with a dull, hopeless look in his eyes.

But Max wasn't near the entrance or on the floor, and it wasn't until a half hour later that Chloe saw him, and then it was she who was watching the entrance and Max, who arrived and stood looking casually around. Max was waiting for Sue Merryfield, who had gone to the ladies' room, but who joined him presently and stood looking casually about, too.

Chloe was furious. It hadn't occurred to her that Max would take some one else to the dance, above all, Sue Merryfield. She was a brunette and had black eyes and knew how to wear her clothes. If Chloe had had a rival at Shore Haven, Sue Merryfield would have been it.

"Avoided You? Why, My Dear, I—" He Paused, Looking Down at Her. "Because," He Finished, "You're a Snob."

It was maddening. Just wait until Max asked her to dance, or cut in! She had it all planned. She'd let him make up first. Oh, she'd be very sweet about that. Then equally as sweetly she'd lead him on, and then when all of Shore Haven was just about ready to expect an announcement of the engagement she'd throw him over. Flat. Drop him like a hot potato. Make him the laughing stock of the resort. Oh, it would be delicious revenge.

When Chloe was in a position to see the door again, Max and Sue were gone. She saw them dancing together, Sue's black head tucked under Max's chin, and this made her blood boil. She waited, black vengeance in her heart. There was nothing of appeal or misery in his eyes. He seemed perfectly content.

And he didn't ask her to dance, either, or cut in. The evening wore on, and Chloe began to experience little sensations of panic. Perhaps when she glanced at him she hadn't injected the old "come hither" look in her eyes that had always been her main support.

Perhaps she had let too much of her true feelings reflect themselves.

And so the next time she passed Sue and Max she smiled in a manner that should have proved devastating. But Max only grinned back in that maddening, amiable fashion he had.

It was the next to the last dance before Max finally cut in. Chloe was weak from the strain. But she rallied nobly. Now was her chance.

"Hello, Max," she said sweetly.

"Hello," said Max matter-of-factly. "Nice dance."

"Beginning now it is," said Chloe. Max grinned. "You women are certainly gluttons for punishment. I'm about dead."

Chloe could have killed him. He hadn't caught her meaning at all. Why, he acted as though they'd never even quarreled. A terrible thought struck her. Could he have forgotten? Lord! Was that all the impression she'd made?

"You weren't so agreeable the last time we were together?"

He looked surprised. "No? When was that?"

Chloe's eyes blazed. "When was it? It was a week ago last night. We were out sailing. You called me a snob!"

"Oh, that?" Max grinned. "Say, you've got a memory! I'd forgotten."

Hot tears were on the verge of brimming up in Chloe's eyes. She could have died. She could have killed Max Hayford. He hadn't even remembered!

The music suddenly stopped, and Max said: "Let's step outside. I'm boiling hot."

He seemed to take her acceptance of the suggestion for granted, because he stepped through the French doors, and there was nothing for Chloe to do but follow. Max leaned against the rail and lighted a cigarette. "What a night," he said, looking at the moon.

"Max, why have you avoided me all evening?"

"Avoided you? Why, my dear, I—" He paused, looking down at her, and suddenly his lips set grimly. "Because," he finished, "you're a snob!"

"I know it, Max, I am. But I'm going to try and change."

Max choked over some cigarette smoke, coughed and fought for air. Presently he retrieved his voice. "Good Lord! You! Chloe Van Murton, admitting you're a snob! Saying you're going to change!" He shook his head. "No. It isn't true. It's too—preposterous!"

"But it is true, Max, I am a snob. And I am going to change." There was no doubting the genuineness of her statement. Max knew she meant it. He looked down and saw only a meek and wholly submissive little girl. Something caught in his throat. He reached out and took her in his arms. She yielded. His lips found hers. He crushed her to him, held her securely for long moments.

At length he drew away. "Chloe—I—I—love you!"

"And I love you, Max. Oh, so very much. I—I've known it all the time, but I was too much of a snob to admit it. You must believe me. It's the first time in my life I've ever humbled myself. I—I had to, when you said you'd forgotten—about our quarrel. I was conceited enough to think I'd made more of an impression than that.

"But you did, darling. A whole lot more. I didn't forget. I lied. It was pride, I guess. If I let you know how I felt I thought you'd gloat over it. I—I'm too much of a snob. I can't stand being humiliated."

And Chloe drew his face down to hers. "Neither can I, darling. Ever again."

Author Once Had to Pay to Have Works Printed

Authors of today are a pampered lot, says the Philadelphia Bulletin. When their work achieves the dignity of publication, they deceive an advance and sign a contract giving them a share in the profits, and if there is a loss it's up to the sanguinary publisher to meet it.

Not so in the olden days. Even Benjamin Franklin, when he felt a message or a platter of platitudes stewing in his brain, had to have them printed in his own shop at his own expense. When it came to straight literature the writer who wanted his brain child set down in black and white had to scare up the money somewhere to pay for the same. There is the first edition of Poe's "Tamerlane," for which the poet had to do quite a little collecting among his relatives and friends to pay the nominal printer's bill.

Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" was printed at the good gray poet's own expense and peddled by him in a market basket on the Camden ferry. However, despite the fact that most contemporary authors are paid for their works, there are still operating in Philadelphia print shops where wistful poets, Utopians and cranks pay to have their labors printed. They are quaint places, usually presided over by individuals of salty and cynical philosophy. In their cubbyholes of offices books are piled to the ceilings, books that have never had the dignity of a review, timid little volumes of poems sent by ambitious unknowns to their friends for Christmas, entitled anything from Danse Macabre to Sonnets and Strays. And then there are the pamphlets written by serious-minded hermits with a message, that advocate every cause under the sun from anti-vivisection to the perils of vaccination. There are a few dramatists on the lists of these local printers, and the bulk of the plays are about Francesca di Rimini.

Philadelphia is headed only by Boston in the amount of printing done for amateur authors, and leads the New England city in the number of vague little magazines brought out by youngsters interested in esthetics, but not yet inured to realty. A visit to these local print shops, many of them in the older part of the city, is like straying into a sad dream, rubbing shoulders with gentle failures and harmless fanatics.

The Loon

The common loon has a velvety black head and neck, hack deep dusky slate, throat gleaming white, bill about 3 inches long, dusky with lighter sides and pointed. It paddles along majestically, its bill parallel with the water surface or tipped into the water looking for fish. It nests north to the Arctic circle.

Propaganda To Influence Men
Very Cheap Empire
Good Airplane News

The learned Doctor Lorge, of Teachers' college, Columbia university, has been studying laws governing propaganda that influences human minds, experimenting on 99 "educated" adults from the list of unemployed, from twenty to sixty-nine years old. These were asked to express their views of "some opinions" uttered by Lincoln, Roosevelt, Hoover, Thomas (the Socialist candidate), Coolidge, Hearst, Karl Marx. Many that reacted favorably to the name of "Lincoln" did not approve Lincoln's statement:

Arthur Brisbane

"Capital is the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not existed."

Those that "objected" had sound reason on their side. Capital is not the fruit of labor any more than labor is the fruit of capital. Capital and labor are both the fruit of human intelligence.

The intelligence of Thomas A. Edison supplied labor, jobs employing millions of men and paying billions in wages, and that Edison intelligence alone supplied capital to those that knew how to use Edison's ideas on a big scale.

The great element in "propaganda," "persuasion," in advertising, is repetition. Say a thing often enough and the average man believes it, not asking why. Of all human convictions, none is more firmly fixed, immovable, than those based on supersition, ignorance, falsehood and preposterous credulity.

Encouraging news:

"An aviation program of more than 1,000 new planes to cost approximately $60,000,000 has been mapped by the Army, Navy and Marine corps for 1936."

If we can afford five thousand million dollars to prevent the depression killing too many Americans we may well spend sixty million dollars to keep foreigners from shooting at all of us.

The Van Sweringen brothers had railroad properties that financial writers called a "three billion dollar empire."

Perhaps "three billion" referred to bonds, watered stocks and other "securities" of the "empire." In any case, the Van Sweringens borrowed forty-eight million dollars on that "empire," largely from J. P. Morgan & Co. They did not pay the forty-eight million dollars, the whole thing was put up at auction, the Van Sweringens bought back control of the "three-billion-dollar empire" for three million dollars, one-tenth of 1 per cent of the three billions and forty-five million dollars less than the amount borrowed on it.

The hurricane that spread destruction over Jamaica and Cuba obeyed the suggestion of Miami's weather bureau and went 200 miles out to sea. Florida, much obliged to that hurricane, wonders whether anybody has any definite plan to control destructive hurricanes.

William J. Cameron, broadcasting from Detroit, able to interpret Henry Ford's views better than anybody else, finds economic signs "already changed for the better." More important, the "American mind has made a remarkable recovery of equilibrium."

Ethiopia's king has "about" 2,000,000 men massed on three fronts, all facing Italians, and ready for anything to happen. Under those conditions something probably will happen. Whatever starts must go to the end. It is not likely, with Hitler preparing for revenge, that France will sever her present relations with Italy for the sake of distressed Ethiopia.

If dear old England should sally forth and find herself all alone, she would probably "sally" back again without firing that first deciding shot. Mussolini knows that.

In Nebraska President Roosevelt addressed his first speech of the campaign of 1936 to 15,000 farmers gathered around the rear end of his car and 20,000,000 other farmers by radio. He talked earnestly, with jesting; he understands the silence of farmers who applaud little while expressing no disapproval.

The farmer, who lives and thinks by himself, is not a demonstrative being.

Explaining and defending AAA, an administration device that tells farmers what, where, how much they may plant, what animals they may raise, what prices they must charge, the President chose this convincing statement:

"Three years ago I visited farms in this state and saw farmers threshing 30-cent wheat and shelling 20-cent corn."

With farmers, facts count. There is no 30-cent wheat or 20-cent corn now.

Trench Silo Aid in Saving Corn

Farmers Urged to Prepare to Preserve Immature Soft Crop.

By E. H. Lehmann, Head Department Agricultural Engineering, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

With condition of the state's 7,500,000 acres of corn, mostly late planted, continuing below average, trench silos bid fair to become an important factor in the preservation and use of soft corn which may be prevalent in many sections this fall.

Because of heavy spring rains and the delayed planting of corn in practically all parts of the state, there is danger that frost will catch much of the corn this fall before it is matured. Soft corn is difficult to store in cribs, bins or barns, but makes excellent silage.

Since it is cheap, simple to construct and costs less to fill, the trench silo appears to be one of the best means by which farmers can store this soft, immature corn. The only construction equipment needed is a plow, slip and tractor or team of horses. Two men with this equipment can construct a trench silo in from two to four days, depending upon the size.

The silo should be constructed with a slight slope in the sides and on high ground where there is less likelihood of standing water. If a bank or slope is available, the lower end of the "trench" may be left open as a natural drain.

Silage must be well packed and kept higher in the middle than on the sides during the filling process. This causes the silage to settle in a rounded manner after the fashion of a hay stack. Covering the silage with about a three or four inch layer of finely cut straw followed by a layer of dirt will help keep out air and prevent spoilage.

Easy Test Aids Breeder of Dry-Weather Wheats

One of the questions to be answered in developing new wheat varieties is: How will they stand dry weather? The question has been answered in the past by observing the new varieties in experimental plots during dry years. But in wet years no information was obtained on drouth resistance. This made the breeding program more difficult and slowed it up materially.

Now plant breeders of the United States Department of Agriculture have found that the rate at which a wheat plant loses water through its leaves indicates its drouth resistance.

Water loss, or transpiration, has been determined by cutting the plants at different stages of growth, sealing the cut ends at once, and weighing at intervals. The method has been developed and checked with varieties of known ability to stand drouth. These were found to lose water least rapidly. For example, Hope wheat, susceptible to drouth, loses moisture more rapidly than Baart and Kubanka, which are resistant to drouth.

Interest in the drouth resistance of wheat, developed during dry seasons, often has been lost in a series of wet years. The development of resistant varieties, nevertheless, is a problem of much importance to the wheat farmer. A simple method of determining drouth resistance—no matter what the rainfall may be—such as this measuring rate of water loss, will aid the development of wheats more tolerant to dry weather.

Quality Cream Demanded

Butter manufacturers want quality cream, and many are paying a premium for it. In some states they refuse to buy poor cream. To insure efficient cooling of cream so that it will stay sweet until marketed, a cooling tank should be arranged so that cold water from the well is forced to the bottom of the tank and allowed to flow out at the top. This water can be carried into a live stock tank. Fresh cream should not be kept in a separate container and stirred constantly until it is thoroughly cooled. All utensils should be kept clean and sterilized. Cream should be marketed at least twice each week.

Agricultural Notes

Stinkweed causes bad flavor in milk. Seed was spread in western straw last winter.

Although agricultural production in this country has increased 50 per cent since 1890, fewer farm children can find enough work to make agriculture a career.

Are Our Eyes Getting Weaker?

Defects of Vision Increase With Years—Poor Light a Cause.

When born, nearly all babies have normal eyes. With the same kind of care that carries them through infancy and childhood, happy and healthy—their eyes should remain normal.

But it has been found that by the time children finish grade school, 20 per cent of them have defective vision. When they have finished college, 40 per cent have eye difficulties. Forty years of age shows 60 per cent with defective vision, and past sixty, 95 per cent are so affected.

Why should the eyes of so many show such an alarming increase in visional defects? Because these children, these growing girls and boys—young and older men and women, used their eyes with too little light!

In the daytime outdoors there is, of course, plenty of light—the natural daylight nature developed our eyes to see by. The light from an unclouded sky gives us 10,000 foot candles. In the shade of a tree, the light will be upwards of 1,000 foot candles. Close by a window there may be 200 foot candles of light shining on your book page or needlework.

What is a foot candle? It is the scientist's "yardstick" of light measurement. The amount of light one candle would shine on a surface one foot away.

But at night—that is another story! It is very common for people to read or sew with only four foot candles of light, where they should have an illumination of at least 10 foot candles for the coarsest kind of eye-work; 20 foot candles for reading fine print and for sewing; 30 foot candles for continued use of the eyes.

Using the eyes with less light than these minimum amounts may result in eye-strain and possible permanent injury to vision.

Be sure you have enough light! If you use electricity—ask your light company to test your lamps and fixtures to see if they give enough light for safe seeing.

If you do not have electricity, get one of the new 300 candle power pressure lamps that burn kerosene or gasoline.

When your work is held three feet away from the lamp, the latter should be of at least 275 candle power intensity to assure the 20 to 30 foot candles of light you need to protect your sight. It is important that you use a high candlepower lamp to be sure you have enough light to protect your sight.

SIX BINS OF OATS AND TWO OF BARLEY SEALED IN HANCOCK

Garner:—Six bins of oats and two of barley have been sealed in Hancock county under federal regulations at 15 cents a bushel. The bins range in content from 510 bushels up to 2,000.

As the House of Representatives adjourned, its members sang "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" to the people who sent them there. It was a friendly gesture but no doubt many of the constituents will answer with "He Was My Man, But He Done Me Wrong."

We are told that conditions have changed and that the old habit of eating is being partly and rapidly curtailed.

ELIMINATE GRAIN WHEN DRYING OFF MILK COWS

Hansen Stresses Importance Of 6-Week Dry Period

In drying off high producing milk cows all grain should be taken away and even the silage and legume hay should be discontinued in some cases, asents E. N. Hansen, dairy husbandryman at Iowa State College.

Many milk cows in the state are being turned dry at the present time. It is important that these cows have at least a six week dry period to assure he best production during the next lactaton period. Care in feeding should be exercised during this period so that the cow will have a sound udder at the time of her next calving. Serious trouble, such as one or more blind udders, will often result if the dry cow is not fed properly.

Ration Given

When a cow begins drying off she should be given timothy or prairie hay and milked irregularly. Within two or three weeks she will be completely dry and then she should be given a full grain ration again. A satisfactory ration for a dry cow includes 300 ponuds of corn and cob meal, 300 pounds of ground oats, 100 pounds of sweet bran and 100 pounds of cracked soybeans or linseed oil meal. In addition it is a good plan to add 1 pound each of salt, steamed bone meal and bround limestone to each 100 pounds of grain mixture.

This ration should be fed at the rate of 8 to 20 pounds per cow per day depending on her size, condition and appetite. Dry cows should get all the alfalfa, silage and pasture that they want.

Specifies Light Ration

In order to keep a cow on feed and to have her udder in good condition at calving time, a light, bulky ration should be fed for a week or 10 days preceeding calving time. A grain mixture of 200 pounds of ground corn, 100 pounds of wheat bran and 100 pounds of cracked soybeans or linseed oil meal is satisfactory. An addition of warm bran mash will act as a good tonic during this period. Heavy, heating feeds should be taken out of the ration and the amount of silage reduced. This ration should be fed until about 3 days after calving.

On the fourth day after calving some of the regular herd mixtrue can be substituted, and 2 to 3 days later the cow should be given a regular grain ration consisting of 400 pounds of corn and cob meal, 400 pounds of oats and 100 pounds of any high protein supplement. Legume hay and corn silage can be fed along with this ration.

The fresh cow should receive 1 pound of grain for each 2½ to 4 pounds of milk that she gives—depending upon the richness of the milk.

THE BLUE EAGLE STILL EATS

Seven million dollars a year, the rate at which the federal government is pouring out tax funds for the continued support of the National Recovery Administration at this moment—four months after the Supreme Court declared the NRA was unconstitutional.

This information comes from Senator William H. King, democrat of Utah, on the basis of an official report submitted to him by the NRA as of September 7.

Although codes were abolished by the Supreme Court decision, the NRA staff now includes 14 special assistants, each with a salary of $6,800, seven special assistants at $6,000 each; 15 special assistants at $5,200 each and 15 special assistants at $4,500 each—all ostensibly having to do with code administration.

The Washington office has on duty 10 economists and one chief statistician at $6,800 each, three principal statisticians at $5,200 each, and one special statistician and one analyst at $4,500 each.

The mildest possible comment on this disclosure is that of the Democratic Baltimore Sun, which is puzzled to know "just what all of this costly executive and legal talent can find to do" and which expresses the hope that "Senator King will pursue his inqury further and let us know in just what manner these Blue-Eagle salaries are being earned."—Exchange.

Most of our politicians stick strictly to the truth, even if they have to lie a little to do so.

We predict more "Boston Tea Parties" when this compulsory control and tax is put on potatoes.

No Printed Word About Art of Gem-Cutting

The mysterious art of gem-cutting which was born some 60-centuries ago, has existed for generations without reference books or bibliography, says a writer in the Washington Star. An art which is parent of one of the world's wealthiest trades is practically unknown in scientific literature. Not a single book about it has ever been printed on an American press. Creation's record collection of books at the Congressional library contains neither tome text book or treatise concerning the fascinating activities of both ancient and modern lapidists. Veiled in secrecy from its inception, this manipulative mastery of both gems and beautiful stones has husbanded its mysteries to the point where they are almost inviolate. Of all the unknown arts, it has rated as the most occult. Rival lapidaries have lived and died without revealing any of their secrets. Crimes were committed. Blood was shed, but not even the wrath of royalty nor the machinations of the underworld were adequate to learn anything more than fragmentary facts about cabochon cutting and the cutting of precious and semi precious stones.

The engraved seals of Babylon and the scarabs of Egypt were the ancient precursors of modern gem-carving. About 500 B. C. gem-cutting attained its greatest artistry, during the days when sapphire points and bow drills were used. Altogether, there are some 125 gem stones, including both precious and semi-precious varieties which are handled regularly in the workshops of professional and amateur lapidaries. Approximately one-half of these are suitable for cabochon cutting, but the finer and more costly ones yield their maximum trove of beauty only when cut facet.

Mosques Are Pronounced Cairo Skyline Feature

Cairo, one of the high points on Mediterranean cruises, is the capital of Egypt the largest city in Africa and one of the most curious cities in the world.

The minarets are the most beautiful in the Levant. There are 500 mosques in the city. In the building of one Gami Sultan Hassan expended $3,000 daily for three years and when it was completed cut off the architect's hands so that he could not construct another like it.

The Citadel, built about 1166, contains a mosque of Oriental alabaster. The Mosque of Tulin, built in the Ninth century, stands on the hill whereon, tradition asserts, the ark rested after the flood. Another legend is to the effect that upon this spot Abraham was about to offer Isaac as a sacrifice when a ram was opportunely found for a substitute. Out in the river lies Rhoda island, where, tradition says, Pharaoh's daughter found the infant Moses in the bullrushes.

Pintail Ducks

Pintail ducks are trim and handsome, but usually shy, ever on the alert for danger. They are very rapid fliers. Pintails are not noisy ducks. The only notes they utter are quacks, which sound very much like the quack of the common mallard. In the field, male pintail ducks may be recognized by their white bellies and the conspicuous white line which runs up the side of the head and neck. The long, pointed central tail feathers are another distinction, and so are the light edgings of the rear of the pintail's wings when the duck is in flight. The female pintails are slender, streaked brown ducks, similar to the female mallard, but more slender and without the white-bordered blue patch on the wing.

The Mynah Bird

The mynah bird, a member of the crow family and cousin of the jay, is a stranger in all parts of the United States except Hawaii. There, however, it has quite overrun the country, makes up a part of every landscape, struts proudly on the back of every water buffalo or dairy cow and graces many a bird cage, in which it sets up a rivalry with the parrot in its ability to talk. The mynah is a native of India and has got only so far as the Hawaiian islands in following the channels of trade. It is barred from Continental United States because over here it is thought that we already have a sufficiently large representation of the aggressive bird family from which is comes.

Elements Act as Sculptor

An island off the southern coast of Nova Scotia is known as Virgin's island because of an almost perfect outline of the Madonna with the Christ Child in her arms which appears as an etching on one of its solid cliffs facing the ocean. This piece of art is the work of nature, working through such agencies as storms, the frequent lapping of the waves of the ocean against the cliff, and frost. So inaccessible is Virgin's island, with its stern rock-bound coast, that no human being has ever set foot on its shores.

Hang Their Criminals

Let no one think Abyssinians are more saintly than some persons who use poison gas, submarines and air bombs in warfare. They do some things that modern Christian nations do, such as in punishments meted out to criminals. The criminal code of the Ethiopians is less refined. They used no lethal chambers, no electric chairs, no guillotines to execute their murderers. They hang them on trees.

Italians Invade Ethiopia and Capture Aduwa

MAKING good on his threats and promises, Benito Mussolini sent his armies crashing across the border of Ethiopia, starting a war that gave all Europe the jitters. Under the command of Gen. Emilio De Bono, chief of the Italian colonial armies, the Italian troops laboriously advanced from Eritrea, crossing the Mareb river frontier and capturing Adigrat and other towns that had already been practically ruined by bombardment from planes. The immediate objective was Aduwa, the scene of the terrific Italian defeat 39 years ago. After several days of hard fighting against the defending Ethiopians, who lost prabably 2,000 killed, the invaders marched into Aduwa, and considered that the disgrace of 1896 had been avenged. The Italian soldiers of General Marivigna's command entered first, carrying to the principal square and there erecting a big stone monument inscribed "To the fallen heroes of Aduwa." There was a report that Mussolini would fly to Aduwa to unveil this memorial.

Gen. De Bono

Italy officially announced that all of Tigre province was in Italian hands, and at the same time her columns were advancing into Ethiopia from the south and east, with the city of Harrar and the country's one railway as their objective. Squadrons of bombing planes were flying here and there, destroying towns and killing many of the inhabitants. In the northern sector the Italian forces were moving onward toward Makale and Aksum, where the Ethiopians were reported ready to offer stiff resistance. Emperor Haile Selassie was said to be about to go to the northern front. He and his advisers were apparently quite satisfied with the showing already made by his armies and spoke contemptuously of the Italian victories.

Meanwhile, in Geneva, the League of Nations council, after hearing the report of a committee of six, found that Italy had resorted to war in violation of the league covenant. This automatically must be followed by sanctions, beginning with the severance of all trade and financial relations with the aggressor nation. Probably Italy could not long endure these penalties, and Geneva was full of rumors that Mussolini was disposed to talk peace with Emperor Haile Selassie after the taking of Aduwa. Premier Laval of France, it was said, proposed to Baron Aloisi that the Duce accept an immediate cessation of hostilities and the creation of a neutral zone in Ethiopia. The peace rumors also were heard in Addis Ababa and one of the emperor's advisers, asked whether the reports were true, replied "almost." It was believed Haile Selassie would insist, in case an armistice were declared, that all Italian troops withdraw from the empire. Italian officials in Rome said they were not thinking of peace terms and that their campaign had just started.

Mussolini's Defiance to All Other Nations

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the opening of hostilities in Ethiopia, Mussolini gave the signal for tremendous mass gatherings of all Fascists in Italy. Millions of Black Shirts in all the cities dropped everything and assembled to cheer for the Duce and his African adventure. From the balcony of the Venezia palace in Rome the premier shouted the words that committed his nation to a policy that may mean either victory or ruin. He reiterated his determination to seize territory from Ethiopia but declared he would do everything possible to prevent the campaign from bringing on a European war. But he warned the League of Nations and all nations to keep their hands off, saying:

"To sanctions of an economic character we reply with our discipline, our sobriety, and our spirit of sacrifice. To sanctions of a military character we will reply with measures of military character. To acts of war we will reply with acts of war."

Embargo Is Proclaimed and Travelers Warned

FIRST giving assurance, in his speech at San Diego, that the United States would not be drawn into any foreign war, President Roosevelt issued two important proclamations. One proclaimed the embargo on all shipments of war material to the belligerent nations. The other warned Americans that travel on Italian or Ethiopian vessels would be at their own risk. Since Ethiopia has no shipping, the latter proclamation was directed solely against Italy. In yet another statement the President reversed our national policy by declaring that Americans who engage in "transactions of any character" with either of the warring nations "will do so at their own risk." In the past the United States has argued for the right of neutral citizens and commerce to "freedom of the seas."

The task of preventing shipment of American arms and munitions to Italy and Ethiopia was undertaken by the coast guard and customs service.

A. F. of L. Report Says Preserve Basic Law

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR opened its annual convention in Atlantic City with many problems up for discussion. In its report the executive council advocated preservation of the national constitution, without amendment for the present, as best for industrial recovery. It said: "That some control must be exerted over the former system of laissez faire cannot be denied.

"The experiment," the report added, (NRA), "which has been concluded, has helped to point the way to the goal which we must seek. How is congress to acquire that control over the industry and trade of our country which will make possible the necessary reforms?

"Until exhaustive studies have been made with respect to attaining this great objective, under our present constitution, we cannot recommend just what steps should be taken in connection with this particular problem."

The report urged vigorous action to drive Reds out of the federation, and recommend the continuation of a strict labor boycott on German goods and services until the Nazis gave "adequate recognition and protection to the rights of minority groups."

Supreme Court Occupies Its New Building

QUITE without ceremony, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes and the eight associate justices of the Supreme court of the United States took possession of their new ten million dollar home which on the outside resembles a Corinthian temple. Everything in the handsome building was new except the nine chairs the eminent jurists occupy, and these would have been replaced if the architects and decorators had had their way.

Chief Justice Hughes

There was a big crowd present to see the justices open the first term of court in the palatial structure but only a few spectators could get inside. The first business was the admission of more than 150 lawyers to practice before the court. Then the calendar was read. On this calendar are six cases which hold the fate of the New Deal. The most important of these is one which will determine the validity of the agricultural adjustment act. That ruling may rank with the Dred Scott decision in its political consequences.

Other important cases are those challenging the Bankhead cotton control act, the Tennessee Valley authority, the right of the Public Works administration to condemn land for housing projects, the corporate reorganization act, and the right of states to tax the property of the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

Gen. Malin Craig Named Chief of Staff

MAJ. GEN. MALIN CRAIG, a veteran of two wars and commandant of the war college, was appointed chief of staff of the American army by President Roosevelt. He took office immediately, succeeding Gen. Douglas MacArthur who is on his way to the Philippines to be military adviser to the new island commonwealth. Craig is advanced to full generalship.

Gen. Malin Craig

Born in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1875, Craig was graduated from West Point in 1898.

Immediately afterward he saw service in Cuba during the Spanish-American war, and in June, 1900, participated in the China relief expedition made necessary by the Boxer outbreak. After service in various army posts in this country, Craig, upon American entrance into the World war in 1917, was assigned as chief of staff of the Forty-first division.

Later he became chief of staff of the First army corps, serving in that position until the armistice was signed. Then he marched into Germany as chief of staff of the army of occupation.

Twelve Persons Killed in Air Liner Crash

TWELVE persons met sudden death when an eastbound plane of the United Air Lines crashed about fifteen miles west of Cheyenne, Wyo., in the early morning hours. The plane apparently struck the peak of a small hill and bounced, nose first, against the top of another hill. Fire did not break out but the impact was fatal to the nine passengers, two pilots and stewardess.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—The President and his two chief relief advisers, Harry L. Hopkins and Secretary Ickes, have just completed a cross-country tour and are now in possession of information on which to base the future course for management of the relief job this winter. What their plans are, beyond the use of the funds appropriated last winter, remain confidential but without doubt the country can expect to see some very definite changes in the practices that have been followed.

Get Data for Relief Job

The New Deal was swept into the governmental control upon the twin arches of recovery and relief. The recovery arch seems to be holding up. The relief arch, I believe, can be said to be teetering. At least that is the conclusion that must be drawn on a set of circumstances in which billions have been spent to tide destitute persons over their distress only to leave millions of them still looking for government handouts.

It is quite apparent that Mr. Roosevelt took his two relief advisers on his Western trip chiefly for the purpose, like the well-known bear, of going over the mountain to see what he could see. The word that has come back to Washington is that he saw some things that were not altogether encouraging. He found that his previous relief methods were not in high favor in the Middle West and on the Pacific coast. Hence there are some changes in prospect.

New Deal opposition has characterized the President's vacation trip westward as being, in part, politics. Whether this be a fact or not, anyone can recall that there is an election in November, 1936, and that shrewd politicians begin many months in advance to oil the campaign machinery and see that the gears mesh. It is not at all unlikely, then, that while Mr. Roosevelt was sincerely examining the relief situation and attempting to ascertain for himself what should be done to make the going easier for those in distress, he probably had in the back of his mind thoughts of how those same people would react when they go to the polls a year hence and find his name as the Democratic Presidential nominee.

Courting Trouble

Some months ago Mr. Roosevelt announced with emphasis that the job of taking care of the destitute must be turned back to the states and private charity. It was, he said, no longer a federal proposition. A good many observers here felt at the time he made that announcement that he was courting trouble. Those who took that view have found their conclusions amply supported by the facts since developed. The President, indeed, has courted trouble and it is a species of trouble that is going to remain with him throughout a long, hard winter just ahead. Probably he will be able to find a way out if, indeed, a way out was not discovered while he and Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes were on their transcontinental tour. To the average person, however, the solution is not so apparent.

That brings us to a phase of federal administration, a new circumstance and problem, confronting the nation. I describe it as a new problem which in fact it is when considered in the light of developments since the New Deal took control.

It seems to me that it ought to be said the Roosevelt administration failed to profit by a knowledge of what has happened heretofore in the use of the dole. Just across the Atlantic has been available a splendid demonstration of what the dole can and will do to a population. The British government listened to the appeals of the professional relievers and humanitarians and adopted a dole. It has taken that nation four years to whittle away even a part of the situation it built up for itself.

Here is the crux of the problem: At any time a governmental agency begins to feed people, to clothe them and to provide them with the other necessaries of life free, by that act it inculcates in those people—not all of them of course—a feeling that the world, and particularly their government owes them a living. A certain percentage of them immediately become convinced that while the dole may be smaller than their weekly pay check earned in industry, it comes without work. In fact, it breeds laziness.

So, in this country now we have a certain percentage of the population who are wholly unwilling to work because they have found that the government will take care of them in times of stress. In consequence, this segment of the population is making no effort to obtain jobs and is quite vocal in its lambasting of a government that will not feed its people.

They Don't Want Jobs

In addition, information that I get from industrial leaders, men who know what labor problems are, tell me that a percentage of the workers whom they have taken back on the jobs, taken them off of relief rolls, are unwilling to do their jobs efficiently; they seek to fill in their time and just get by, and they resent any admonitions from foremen or bosses that a certain amount of work is required of them if they are to remain on the pay roll. Some instances have been reported even that workers of this type have replied to their employer's requests for honest labor: "We don't care. We can go back on relief."

It is a tragedy. Unfortunately, it is going to be with us for some years to come and when I make that statement I do not mean in any way to withhold praise from those men and women who, when they get a job, try to do an honest day's work for a day's wage. Obviously, most of the American people are of this latter type. But I believe it cannot be refuted that the American government's experiment with the dole has created several millions of new panhandlers.

President Roosevelt has introduced an innovation into federal administration by making public what amounts to a preliminary summation of federal financial requirements. He ordered it compiled and released for publication at this early date, he said, in order that the country may know what confronts it in the way of expenditures for the fiscal year beginning last July 1, and ending next June 30.

See Expensive Year Ahead

A careful analysis of the summation and the revision of estimates of expenditures for the current fiscal year rather indicates that it will be the most expensive in New Deal history. This is true despite Mr. Roosevelt's declaration that a sharp up-swing in business activity will result in a marked curtailment in relief expenditures. The budget statement by the President was regarded in the national Capital as rather illusory. In fact, some of Mr. Roosevelt's own subordinates entertained a fear that the thing would be regarded as having a political purpose. They felt that there was no call for the action and that it might logically result in providing New Deal opposition with new ammunition which it can use in criticizing waste and maladministration particularly with respect to the relief programs.

The summation shows that the actual deficit for the current year to date is more than half again as large as was the deficit on the corresponding day last year, despite the business recovery about which Mr. Roosevelt lately has talked several times.

It showed further that even under the revised estimates submitted by the President, expenditures for the current year will be $400,000,000 more than last year and $600,000,000 more than in the first year of the New Deal. The President in his statement asserted that the deficit next June 30, will be $300,000,000 less than the last fiscal year, but if one digs into the mass of figures it can be seen that this $300,000,000 has been simply transferred to revised budget figures for the works-relief program.

On this basis then, some observers persistently inquire where the substantial and sustained economy in government has been effected either by the administration or by the business improvement. It is difficult to answer. It is more difficult, in the opinion of Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the Republican national committee, because of the frequent references which Mr. Roosevelt made during his 1932 campaign to a program of enforced economy in government.

Ever since the President began writing the New Deal budgets, capital observers have been awaiting the day when, under the pressure of political necessity or a sincere determination on his part to carry out his political promises, he would start squeezing the excess out of those budgets. I think it is fair to say that there has been an immense amount of water in the government budgets under the New Deal. Equally, I think it is fair to say that there has been a tremendous amount of waste. Thus, the time apparently has arrived when the President must start to trim down these costs if the national debt is not to get clear out of bounds. As a politician of the keenest type, Mr. Roosevelt recognizes better, perhaps, than anyone else that the American people do not like to see debts piled up, debts either private or public. Consequently, it is not an unsafe forecast to make that Mr. Roosevelt will be turning soon to curtailment of expenditures.

It has been interesting to compare the budgets under the Hoover administration with those by Mr. Roosevelt. Always was optimistic Mr. Hoover about his budgets. In fact, they were always smaller than an honest estimate of requirements called for. Mr. Roosevelt has been as flagrantly pessimistic about his budgets as Mr. Hoover was optimistic. The result, of course, has been that the Roosevelt budgets were extraordinarily large and somewhat unjustified.

Food Expert Turns Court Into School and Wins Case

Uncle Sam's food examiners strive for accuracy—it's part of their job. One of them recently converted a federal court into a schoolroom and enabled the government to win a contested food seizure case. The cannery whose food was seized testified its count of molds was consistently lower than those of the government.

B. J. Howard, chief of the microanalytical laboratory of the food and drug administration, who teaches cannery employees the proper method of using the microscope in examining and counting molds on foods, was summoned.

At the court's direction he instructed the cannery's food examiner in correct use of the microscope and revealed errors in the latter's method of examination. The cannery attorney watched closely, and later consented to a decree of condemnation as originally sought by the government.

GERMAN WOMEN LABOR

In Germany, women are gradually being taken out of the factory and office to make more jobs for men. Stenographers, salesgirls, servant girls, factory workers are being placed in labor camps to drain marshes, build roads, cultivate the land and harvest crops. Also they are required to do a helpful kind of work calculated to strengthen the potential mother of the new Germany.

MRS. K. J. TOBIN, OF BEVERLY HILLS, ILL., WELCOMES

Calumet Baking Powder . . . in a big, new 10¢ can!

"WHAT'S THE SENSE in taking chances with second-bests when you can get a good, big can of Calumet for a dime?" asks Mrs. Tobin.

"I've never had a baking failure with Calumet," Mrs. Tobin said. And judging by the expectant faces of Richard and Patricia, Mrs. Tobin is not the only member of her family who knows how delicious Calumet cakes always are!

WHY DOES CALUMET give such astonishing "baking luck"? Why is Calumet different from other baking powders? Because Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl. A slower one for the oven . . . and Calumet's double-action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening—every time.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in history . . . the regular price of Full-Pound Can is now only 25¢! And be sure to see the new, big 10¢ can—a lot of good baking for a dime, with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder. A product of General Foods.

MAN AT WODEN SHOOTS SELF

Runs 330 Feet After Shot Pierces Heart; Inquest Will Not Be Held

Garner:—Hancock county authorities announced Friday that Elmer Davis, 27, had come to his death from suicide. Officers said that he had shot himself with a .410 gauge shotgun, the shot entering his heart. Then he apparently ran for 330 feet before falling.

The body was found about 6 o'clock Thursday eve by his nephew. Davis, who lived with his sister, Mrs. Sidney Lundgren, southeast of Woden, had been hunting. Officers were called after his body was seen and spent some ime hunting a weapon, but found none Thursday night.

Coroner Kenneth Boughton of Britt called Sheriff E. P. Hansen and Deputy Leslie Brower when it appeared foul play might have been involved, but the gun was found Friday morning. Coroner Boughton who said that Davis apparently shot himself on a little knoll and then ran to the point 330 feet away stated that no inquest would be held.

Members of the family said that Davis had been mentally ill. He was unmarried. Surviving are a brother, three sisters and his mother, at Belmond.

Ward's New House Is Nearly Completed

NEW HOUSE ON WARD FARM SOON READY FOR FINISHING

The new house being built by Mrs. Mary Church on her farm occupied by Henry Ward and family will soon be completed. Lathing was finished last week and the plasterers went to work Monday. The interior finish will soon be put in and the Ward family will soon be enjoying this modern new farm home. The house was planned by Mrs. Mary Church and the new home is nicely arranged in every particular. It is roomy and there appears to be no waste space. It will be heated with a warm air furnace and is complete with electrical wiring and modern plumbing. A new barn was built on the place recently and with the new house added the farm will be very attractive.

Ten Commandments Of Safe Driving

Ten commandments for the safety of Iowa motorists were issued Saturday by Lew Wallace, superintendent of the state motor vehicle department.

Unless meeting someone who is driving in violation of the commandments, the motorist who adheres to the simple code will find himself not only alive but uninjured as far as traffic accidents are concerned.

Following are Wallace's commandments:

1. Don't pass another car on hills or curves.
2. Don't forget to use your left hand for signaling purposes.
3. Dim your lights when you're approaching another car at night.
4. Don't cut in and out of traffic.
5. Observe all stop signs—and stop.
6. Keep your footbrakes and emergency brakes properly tightened.
7. Drive at such a rate of speed that your car is under control as to condition both of traffic and highway.
8. Don't "jump" traffic lights—wait for the green signal.
9. Don't park on highways.
10. Be courteous—have some consideration for the other fellow, be he pedestrian or driver.

Work On Paving Began Monday

GRADING FOR PAVING PROJECT STARTED ON KLEMME ROAD

Fred Carlson Construction Company Of Decorah, Now At Work

The Fred Carlson Construction Co., of Decorah, shipped in their road building equipment and unloaded their machinery here the latter part of the week.

Work on grading Highway 179 leading into Klemme from U. S No. 69 began Monday and work is being rushed right along. Two new culverts were built, one just a few rods west of the tracks and the other, a larger culvert has been built about two hundred yards east of No. 69.

The new cement road will have wide corners where the road joins No. 69 west of Klemme.

GOOD FELLOWSHIP S. S. CLASS HAD ANNUAL DINNER

Mrs. William Stille Elected Teacher For Coming Year

The Good Fellowship class of the Methodist Church, and their families, enjoyed their annual class dinner at the church dining room Sunday, when about fifty people were served at two long tables.

After the dinner a short program was given and an election of officers was held. Those elected for the coming year were R. A. Jorgenson, president; Harry Gibbs, vice-pres., Mrs. A. L. Kingery, secretary and treasurer. Mrs. William Stille was elected class teacher, with Mr A. L. Kingery as assistant teacher.

The officers were named as a board and committees were named for the coming year.

Henry Ward Is Quite A Naturalist And Has Variety Of Game

The writer had occasion to call on Henry Ward Sunday afternoon at his home south and east of Klemme. Our friend Henry is quite a naturalist and likes wild game. About the farm yard is a variety of wild and call ducks, wild geese, crossed geese, brant and tame ducks. Henry also has a fine herd of carricul purebred and mixed sheep. The hides from young lambs are very valuable and a ladies long fur coat made up of these hides is worth around $600. It takes at least 22 hides to make a coat. Henry has also made quite a business of raising hunting dogs and he specializes in Chesapeakes. And to top things off Henry likes to hunt and in spare time does taxidermy as a hobby.

If Uncle Sam, by some serious diplomatic lapse should be dragged into a war with Italy we suppose the restaurants would have to rename spaghetti, Yankee noodles.

IOWA STATE-MISSOURI GAME AT AMES SATURDAY

Football fans in this vicinity who want to see a good game will probably drive to Ames Saturday to see Missouri University and Iowa State College mix it up on the football field. Both teams are in the Big Six conference and both have been playing some fine football this fall. The kick-off is at 2:00 o'clock.

DISTRICT CORN-HUSKING DERBY TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29TH

County Contest To Be Held On Monday, October 28th

Final arrangements have been completed for the district corn husking contest to be held at the Fred Greiman, Jr. farm, 1½ miles south of Garner.

Eleven counties have already made their entries for the contest. They are Humboldt, Kossuth, Cerro Gordo, Winnebago, Wright, Franklin, Worth, Floyd, Mitchell, Butler and Hancock.

The Garner Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the county Farm Bureau is jointly sponsoring the contest. The Chamber of Commerce is giving $35 as prizes to the winners.

The field selected for the event will yield from 70 to 75 bushels per acre, is clean and stands well.

The district corn husking meet has been held in Hancocg County the last three years. Much interest is always developed in this rural athletic event. Members of the committee looking after the details are Otto Kloock, chairman, Ed Bock and Art Wille.

The county contest will be held jointly with Cerro Gordo county on October 28th at the Will Eno farm north of Sheffield. Four entries from Hancock have already been made. They are: Morris Nix, John Fank, Harold Radloff and Wilbur Hollatz. Two or three more entries will be accepted so if you are interested write or call the Farm Bureau office at Garner.

FIRE AT GIBBS FARM HOME DID LITTLE DAMAGE

A roof fire at the Harry Gibbs home, east of Klemme, Thursday noon did but little damage. The alarm was telephoned into Klemme and chemical fire extinguishers were rushed to the Gibbs farm but the fire was easily put out and only a small patch of shingles was burned near the chimney.

Every farm home should have a telephone for when emergencies as this arise, help is wanted quickly.

In the October programs for the Avery "Becky Sharp" is advertised to be shown for the dates of October 27, 28 and 29. This picture has been changed. "SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT", starring George Raft, Joan Bennett, Walter Connolly and Billie Burke, has been substituted. "She Couldn't Take It" is one of the fastest and funniest pictures to be released from Hollywood in many months. Garner will be one of the first cities to play it.

"She Couldn't Take It" tells a story of the smartest Deb in town who gets a lesson in love from a tough Guy who tells her where to get off—and when—and how. "Becky Sharp" will be played at later date.

On the same program, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 27, 28 and 29, will be the world famous Dionne quintuplets in their latest picture "Going On Two". You will see these famous babies walking, playing, bathing, their moods and habits. Also a Mickey Mouse cartoon entitled "Mickey's Service Station".

This triple feature program will make an ideal show to attend. So make your plans now to see it.

GOLDIE'S GOLD

IT IS hardly fair to a man, when he guides a party clear across the mountains from California to Kansas, to expect him to agree with everything a smart-aleck scout has to say. So thought Goldie, the weather-beaten Missourian who had brought his expedition safely back from the gold fields of the Far West. He and the scout could not agree on various subjects; they were always on the verge of quarreling, and at last the long-threatened storm broke.

What a quarrel it was! The scout had gone off, sullen. Goldie remained with the party, triumphant but slightly apprehensive. No telling what that scout might be up to!

Goldie was right. The scout had gone ahead and met up with some Pawnees, and he was arranging with them to capture the party and get the gold they were bringing with them.

Near where Wichita, Kan., now stands, the Pawnees came into view. Goldie hastily rounded up his charges and harangued them. They must fight, said he, but he reckoned that the Indians were after gold as much as anything else, and they'd better let him have all there was, so he could get away and bury it in a safe place. This was speedily done.

In the excitement of the Pawnee attack, no one on either side noticed the Missourian gliding out of sight. He paused long enough to see that the Indians were besting the travelers; before long, he surmised rightly, none would be left alive. So he had better go on—and keep going.

The scout, as soon as his Indian allies had killed everyone in the train, began to look for the gold. He could not find it; furthermore, he could not find Goldie among the slain. His anger rose again, and he gathered the Pawnees together to follow the trail.

Goldie, in the meantime, had hurried on. He came to Artillery mountain, in Oklahoma, and here he buried the gold near a strangely twisted tree, and hastened on. Somewhere on the way the pursuing Pawnees lost the trail, and Goldie reached home in safety.

Not long afterward, the Missourian became very ill. Feeling sure that he would not live to go back for the buried treasure, he confided the secret to his wife, and died.

Mrs. Goldie, not wanting to pit her woman's strength against heaven only knew what perils, preferred to wait for a while before she went treasure hunting. Their son was six years old; she kept her own counsel until 1882, when the lad had become a man. Then she felt that they might try to recover the wealth which her husband had buried so long ago.

They found the mountain, and they found an Indian who owned the ground and who remembered the location of the twisted tree. But, although they searched long and earnestly, they never found the gold.

BEESWAX AND DOUBLOONS

THREE galleons laden with doubloons, bars of gold, and other treasures, setting sail to the south! What a sight they made, as they left port in Panama, heading for the Horn!

But their majestic journey was suddenly cut short. Instead of continuing on their way, rounding the horn and setting sail for Spain, the three galleons suddenly veered about and began an undignified flight northward.

The reason was not hard to discover: Sir Francis Drake and his British privateers were after the ships of Spain, all sail set to catch up with and capture those three ship-loads of gold. No wonder the galleons fled!

They kept ahead of their pursuers, but could not lose them. Nothing could be done but continue north, far out of the course they had hoped to pursue. On and on they sailed, always dogged by those tenacious Britishers, until at last they ran into a tempest, and in the face of this new danger they forgot their pursuing foes.

The tempest was too much for Drake's ships. They lost heart; gold is a fine thing, but one must live to enjoy it. So they turned back, cheated by wind and wave of the prize they had been hunting. And though they kept a sharp lookout for the return of the Spanish galleons, they never saw them again—nor did anyone else. The three ships, full of gold disappeared forever in that mighty tempest.

In 1870 a cave was discovered in Tillamook county, Oregon, which was thought to be the work of some shipwrecked men. The cave had been enlarged with all sorts of tunnels and shafts leading to chambers hidden away from the light. On the walls were inscriptions, but no one could read them after long years under the eraser of time.

And the Indians who prowl along the sandy bars nearby sometimes find great pieces of beeswax, which seem to have come from nowhere. But beeswax was a part of the cargo of those three galleons.

So it is thought that somewhere nearby the great ships foundered, and that either under the sea or in some undiscovered chamber of the cave lies that precious cargo of Spanish doubloons and bars of gold.

CARE IN CHOOSING BOOKS FOR CHILD HAS ITS REWARD

The story of Abraham Lincoln and his struggle for education gives the cue to Alma H. Jones' article, "Satisfy Your Child's Book Hunger," in Hygeia.

"Books are to the mind what sunshine is to the body," implies that just as the well cared for child receives daily sun exposure as an aid to physical growth, so also should he receive early "exposure" to lullabies, rhymes and stories, which constitute aids to mental and emotional growth.

Very early the child needs to establish right attitudes toward books. By the time a child is fifteen or eighteen months old he can easily learn to handle a book without tearing the pages, if the paper is strong and the pages are not too large. Young children who are not yet able to read enjoy picture books or picture-story books.

Though considerable emphasis is placed on the importance of children of school age reading for themselves and in quantity this should not be interpreted as a reason for ending the reading or story-telling hour of parents and other adults. Through such means the young boy or girl may be stimulated to more difficult reading on new subjects, for the parent or adult may interpret through voice or explanation much that would otherwise be lost on the child who does not read easily. There is permanent value as well as present pleasure in the story hour.

The general characteristics of a good book include large clear type, an uncrowded, well-paragraphed page, a pleasing appearance, a lively tale and a well-sustained reader interest.

"The Grandfather of His Country"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EVERYONE knows that George Washington was the "Father of His Country," but how many know that a man three years younger than Washington was the "Grandfather of His Country"?

Paradoxical though such a statement may be, yet there is some justification for giving that title, as a recent biographer of John Adams does, to the man who was born in Braintree, Mass., on October 30, 1735—just 200 years ago. This biographer calls Adams the "Grandfather of His Country" because he was the man who was primarily responsible for making Washington commander-in-chief of the Continental army, thereby starting the Virginian on the road which led to his becoming the "Father."

Although the actual nomination of Washington for that position was made in the Continental congress by Thomas Johnson of Maryland, yet it was Adams who developed the sentiment which caused the nomination to be ratified. When congress, urged thereto by Adams, adopted the New England troops around Boston as a Continental army and began looking around for a commander-in-chief, Adams realized that the selection of any of the New England officers for the post would be certain to result in an outbreak of inter-colonial jealousies. So he proposed that an "outsider" be brought in and suggested the name of the man who, as a major in the Virginia Colonial forces, had distinguished himself during the ill-fated Braddock expedition 20 years earlier. Not only would this accomplish its purpose of preventing ill-feeling among the New Englanders, but as a compliment to Virginia, it would also guarantee more enthusiastic support of the revolutionary movement by the southern brethren. The history of the Revolution is ample proof of the wisdom of John Adams and what a master stroke of diplomacy his suggestion turned out to be.

But his part in making Washington commander-in-chief was not the only factor in justifying his right to the title of "Grandfather of His Country." Another historian has summed up the other factors as follows: "His public services extended over a period of 25 years, and in that crowded quarter of a century he contributed as much to the creation and development of his country as any man of his time. He was the statesman who formulated the political theories to blast parliamentary prerogatives; he was the courageous patriot who forced a reluctant congress along the road to revolution and defended the Declaration of Independence; he was the uncompromising diplomat who brought military and financial aid to the American cause, wrested miraculously favorable terms from Great Britain, and stubbornly protected American interests from the supposed machinations of wily European diplomats; he was the solon who wrote the model constitution for Massachusetts; he was the President who heroically chose peace instead of war with France, and broke the power of the pernicious Hamiltonian clique."

To this might be added these other facts: he was among the first to recognize clearly that "independence of the colonies was inevitable and union essential"; although Thomas Jefferson did the actual writing of the Declaration of Independence, it contained many of "the very principles which Adams had been expounding day after day for two years"; he played an important part in establishing the American navy; he was one of the most vigorous defenders of the Constitution after it was adopted; he had a hand in giving to the nation the greatest interpreter of that Constitution, for he, as President, made John Marshall chief justice of the Supreme court; he was a "prophet in forecasting the economic development of the United States and in wishing to adapt the frame of government in the future to that basis"; and the "general principles of a government for which he stood have survived to this day and are still showing a great degree of influence."

It has become almost axiomatic that genius rarely, if ever, transmits itself and that great fathers seldom beget great sons. But John Adams comes as near, perhaps, as any other American to being the exception which proves the rule. For his son, John Quincy Adams, kept up the standard set by his father and even advanced it, and succeeding generations of the Adams line have continued to advance it. Years ago some one made the statement that "American history is all cluttered up with Adamses," and a recent historian has amplified this statement by declaring, "In America there is one family, and only one, that generation after generation has consistently and without interruption, made contributions of the highest order to our history and civilization." So it is further proof of the aptness of the "grandfather" title that John Adams started those contributions.

The Adams family was established in America about 1630 when a certain Henry Adams, probably because of a combination of religious and economic reasons, decided to leave England and try his luck in the New World. By chance he settled at a place called Braintree in Massachusetts. He married and had children, who in turn married and handed down the family name. This went on for four generations without producing any man of distinction until we come to John Adams, a farmer and shoemaker in Braintree, who married Susanna Boylston, daughter of a family prominent in the medical history of the colony.

Then on October 30, 1735, there was born to John Adams and Susanna Boylston Adams a son to whom was given his father's name. "With the fifth generation in the person of John Adams, historian, publicist, diplomat, President of the United States, the family not only suddenly achieves national and international position, but maintains it in successive generations for two centuries." So writes James Truslow Adams (a Virginia Adams, by the way, and not related to the Massachusetts clan) in his book, "The Adams Family," published by Little, Brown and company of Boston a few years ago. "Was it due to some mysterious result from the combination of Adams and Boylston blood far beyond the ken of science even today; or to some unfathomable synchronism, between the peculiar qualities of the Adamses and the whole social atmosphere of the next few generations, a subtle interplay of unknown forces; or to mere chance in a universe in which atoms rush and collide chaotically? Fascinating as is the problem, it is insoluble. All we shall see is that without warning, like a 'fault' in the geologic record, there is a sudden and immense rise recorded in the psychical energy of the family."

John Adams

The Signing of the Declaration of Independence

The White House in 1801

As a matter of fact there was not much in the early history of John Adams to indicate the pre-eminence that was to be his. He was graduated from Harvard college in 1755 and for a time was principal of a grammar school at Worcester. Three years later he began practicing law in Suffolk county and first became outstanding among his fellow citizens when at a town meeting he was the author and mover of the notable stamp act resolutions. Moving to Boston in 1768 he was chosen a representative to the general court two years later and in 1774 he was made one of the delegates from Massachusetts to the first Continental congress.

Upon his return he was made a member from Braintree to the provincial congress, then in session, and in 1775 he became a member of the historic second Continental congress. Within a year Adams, who was the most outspoken of the advocates of independence from the Mother Country, became a leader in bringing that about. With the same political sagacity which he had shown in having a Virginian selected as head of the Continental army, he influenced another Virginian, Richard Henry Lee, to introduce in June, 1776, the resolution for the separation and he seconded that introduction.

When the resolution came up for debate, Lee was absent and Adams was its chief defender, for there were a number of delegates who still were in favor of patching up the colonies' differences with England. Having promoted the idea of independence, it was only natural that Adams should be named on the committee of five to draw up such a declaration. Thomas Jefferson of Virginia was chosen chairman of the committee which was composed of Adams, Benjamin Franklin of Pennsylvania, Roger Sherman of Connecticut and Robert R. Livingston of New York.

According to Adams' autobiography, he and Jefferson were appointed by the committee to prepare a rough draft of the document and when Jefferson proposed that Adams write this draft he declined for the following reasons, as he gives them: "(1) That he was a Virginian and I a Massachusettensian. (2) That he was a southern man and I was a northern one. (3) That I had been so obnoxious for my early and constant zeal in promoting the measure that every draft of mine would undergo a more severe scrutiny and criticism in congress than of his composition. (4) And lastly, and that would be reason enough if there were no other, I had a great opinion of the elegance of his pen and none at all of my own. I therefore insisted that no hesitation should be made on his part. He accordingly took the minutes and in a day or two produced to me his draft." So John Adams passed up his chance to be the "author of the Declaration of Independence" and that honor fell to Thomas Jefferson.

Among the other distinctions that belong to John Adams is the rather dubious one that he was the "Father of the Noisy Fourth." For after the Continental congress had adopted the Declaration of Independence on July 2, 1776, Adams wrote to his wife:

"The day will be the most memorable epoch in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parades, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of this continent to the other from this time forward forever more."

Adams' part in bringing about the Declaration of Independence would have been enough to guarantee his immortality if he had never done anything more. But it was destined to be only the beginning of his service to the nation which he had helped establish. In the same year he was made chief justice of his state but resigned the next year to become chairman of the board of war and ordnance. In 1778 he was appointed commissioner to France to secure aid in the struggle for liberty and the next year he was appointed minister to negotiate a treaty with England. In 1780 he was sent to Holland to negotiate a loan from that country and in the same year was made minister to Holland with a special commission to sign the articles of armed neutrality.

Recalled to Paris in 1781, the following year he negotiated a loan of two millions in Holland and concluded a treaty of commerce and amity with the Dutch. Next he acted as one of the commissioners in concluding the treaty of peace which ended the Revolution and he became our first minister to the Court of St. James. Elected to the Continental congress in 1788, he was chosen the first vice president in our history in 1789 and was re-elected when Washington was re-elected President. Finally in 1796 came the climax of his career when he became President of the United States.

After that his career was something of an anti-climax, for he proved to be a very unpopular President and was denied a second term. After the adoption of the Constitution and during his terms as vice president and President, he and his friend, Thomas Jefferson, colleagues in the great work of writing the Declaration of Independence, slowly drifted apart. Adams, the Federalist, was an advocate of a strong centralized government. Jefferson, the Republican, strong in his faith in the "wisdom of the people," championed the cause of democracy and states' rights. Embittered by his defeat by Jefferson during the campaign of 1800 when he was a candidate for re-election, Adams "clattered out of Washington on that cold gray morning of March 4, 1801, and returned to private life . . . to his farm and his friends and his books. Seated in an old armchair in his well-stocked library, he took up again his study of philosophy and history, renewed his interrupted but never broken friendship with Jefferson, watched the dissolution of the Federalist party with a certain grim satisfaction and thought much on religion and on death."

Death came for him on an historic day—July 4, 1826. It was the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and a gala day throughout the land. The people had wanted Adams and Jefferson to take part in their festivities. But the tired old man (he was ninety-one) in Braintree, Mass., could not leave his home. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon he died. His last words were "Thomas Jefferson still lives." He did not know that down in Virginia another tired old man of eighty-three had already slipped quietly into an endless sleep after asking, "Doctor, is it the Fourth yet?" It was then just an hour after midnight.

CHEAP LABOR

The bridge built in 1772 which carries the western highway over the Seine at Neuilly-Sur-Seine, France, has become inadequate for modern traffic and is to be replaced. The new bridge, however, is likely to be more costly than the old. Accounts still preserved show that the contractor in 1772 paid his masons 46 cents, carpenters 45 cents, and laborers 26 cents a day, and they were not 8 hour days, either. But living was cheaper then.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with anything less than Creomulsion; which goes right to the seat of the trouble to aid nature to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, your druggist is authorized to guarantee Creomulsion and to refund your money if you are not satisfied with results from the very first bottle. Get Creomulsion right now. (Adv.)

Quick, Complete Pleasant ELIMINATION

Let's be frank. There's only one way for your body to rid itself of the waste matters that cause acidity, gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts—your intestines must function.

To make them move quickly, pleasantly, completely, without griping. Thousands of physicians recommend Milnesia Wafers. (Dentists recommend Milnesia wafers as an efficient remedy for mouth acidity).

These mint flavored candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly in accordance with the directions on the bottle or tin, then swallowed, they correct acidity, bad breath, flatulence, at their source and at the same time enable quick, complete, pleasant elimination.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48 wafers, at 35c and 60c respectively, or in convenient tins containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately an adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores carry them. Start using these delicious, effective wafers today.

Professional samples sent free to registered physicians or dentists if request is made on professional letter head.

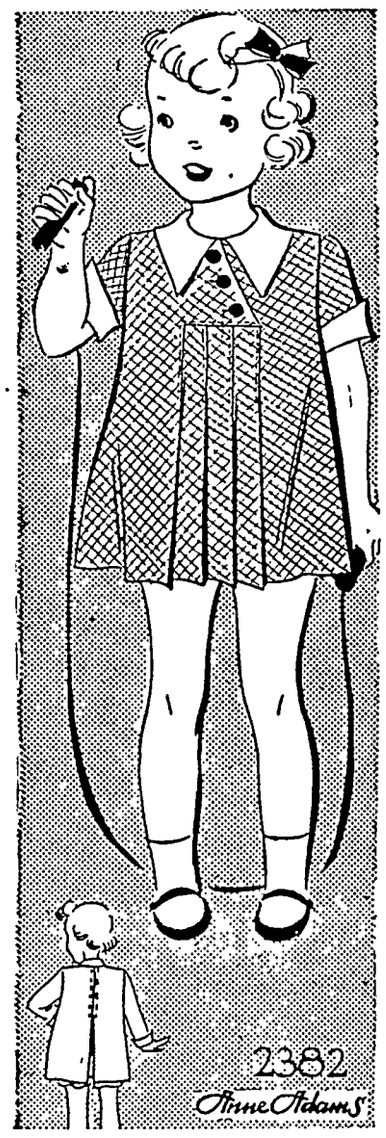
Smart Play Frock That's Easy to Sew

PATTERN 2382



Pleated for play, in a very new way, this child's frock gives her plenty of room for rope-skipping. Her mother will find this smart frock so easy to cut and put together, and a very economical pattern, since bloomers are included with the dress. You can make these up in the same material, or just plain white to wear with other frocks, and no child can have too many pairs. The buttoned closing of the frock takes a new slant, and don't worry about those four pleats! They're as easy a decoration as you've ever made. Colorful novelty cotton for that crisp look, and a choice of short or long sleeves.

Pattern 2382 is available in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 6 takes 2½ yards 36 inch fabric and ⅜ yard contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 243 West Seventeenth St., New York City.

National Topics Interpreted

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It may be, and possibly is, true that the bulk of our people pay little attention to the fact that gold is pouring into the United States in an unprecedented volume. I can understand how the wheat farmer of the plains country or the cotton farmer of the South or any other type of farmer can fail to become excited over the influx of gold in the last five or six months. It appears to be a far cry from the grain fields or the cotton fields or the quarries or the small town to the heavy concentration of yellow metal to which the United States has been subjected. But the link nevertheless exists. It exists as surely and as definitely as night follows day and, therefore, it becomes a subject in which all of us are vitally interested.

Gold Is Pouring In

Since the beginning of September a widespread flight of capital from Europe has manifested itself in the shape of gold exports to the United States. Three or four hundred millions of dollars in gold have landed here in that time. They bring the net inflow of gold for the year well above $1,000,000,000. And, going a bit further, this addition plus another $1,000,000,000 places our gold stocks in excess of $9,400,000,000, or roughly $2,000,000,000 more than was held here when the dollar was devalued under President Roosevelt's instructions.

It seems impossible to attribute this heavy and prolonged inflow to any single cause. Immediately after devaluation of the dollar, there was a steady stream of yellow metal headed for the United States which was due almost entirely to a desire of American holders of gold, temporarily stored abroad, to repatriate. But even in that case, there was a contributory factor to be considered. Monetary manipulation by the American government had a temporary effect on our exports, increasing them to some extent and it was increasing the balance of payments due to this country. So, we find our policies—that is, policies of the Roosevelt administration—responsible for the start of the inflow.

Later, another influence developed. Under the pressure of American monetary policies, foreign powers found their allegiance to the gold standard severely strained. Silver purchases by the treasury had an effect. The combination was primarily responsible for the second rush of gold.

Subsequently, the Italian-Ethiopian controversy began to take serious form and a new flood of gold to America developed. This was different than that which had immediately preceded it because this movement was related to international conditions of a political nature whereas the previous movement had resulted without relation to international strife in a military way but centered wholly upon American monetary policies and their effect upon economic conditions abroad.

Now, let us consider what can happen. Those acquainted with finance recognize in the existence of a gigantic stock of gold—the largest in American history and approximately 45 per cent of the entire world stock—the existence of a potential, if indeed it is not a probable, base for inflation. There is so much gold held by the American government, which holds virtually all of the gold stocks in this country, that no end of paper money can be issued against it. Those who believe in that type of currency policies say that it would be perfectly safe; that the government could pay off dollar for dollar or even more than a dollar for every paper dollar outstanding from the gold it holds. This school of thought contends that there is actually a shortage of money in circulation and insists that this is one reason why the country has not recovered from the depression more rapidly than conditions show. Of course, a cold appraisal of that argument catalogues it as the same old demand for inflation of the currency and everyone knows what inflation will do in the way of wrecking the person who works for wages or whose sole income consists of a compensation delivered to him in the form of weekly, semi-monthly, or monthly pay checks. The size of that check never has and never will catch up with the increase in prices which that individual must pay to live.

What Can Happen

Then, there is another potential danger in this tremendous horde of gold. It is in many ways similar to that which I have just related. It is, however, more of a psychological condition than the first. I refer to the attitude usually adopted by those who pull for inflation when they see a government possessed of vast stores of precious metals.

* * *

In this instance, the tangent of inflationist sentiment is joined with the sponsors of the silver buying program. They see all of this gold and silver and they simply cannot resist the opportunity for continued howling. Their speeches and their conversations are almost like a college yell: "We want more money," the more money which they desire being nothing more nor less than currency run off in the printing presses of the great bureau of engraving and printing in Washington.

'We Want More Money'

Whether it is the first or the second type of inflation that is demanded, whether it is the printing press money or the money issued against gold as security, the results are the same. It is to be remembered in this connection that none of us can obtain gold from the treasury. The Roosevelt administration demanded of and obtained from congress legislation which definitely prohibited payment of gold for monetary use by the treasury under any circumstances except for the settlement of balances owed foreign nations. But that fact has not deterred demands by inflationists. They are calling and will continue to call for more paper money, and with every call the prices you pay for commodities are bound to increase—that is, they will increase until or unless there is a release of gold again for circulation as money.

So, it is quite apparent that as long as this influx of gold continues and as long as other nations are harassed by monetary manipulation in the United States, we are continually threatened with a "business boom" which is nothing less than inflation of credit. The real danger confronting this country, then, lies in that direction. Summarized, the threat is this: if that inflationist "business boom" gets started, no power on earth is able or will be able to stop it. The next and final step after that is complete destruction of our currency, and medium of exchange.

Political developments in the last few weeks have been completely dominated by the splurge of activity on the part of former President Herbert Hoover. His pot shots at the New Deal in several speeches have agitated the Democrats much more than they are willing to admit and, notwithstanding assertions of satisfaction, they have thrown a new fear into the laps of the Roosevelt New Dealers.

Stirred by Hoover

But, if the Hoover speeches have excited the New Dealers and the conservative Democrats, they have almost precipitated a riot among the Republicans of whom he must be said to be, at least, the titular leader. The bulk of the Republicans look upon Mr. Hoover, because of these recent speeches, as a potential Republican nominee for the Presidency against Mr. Roosevelt next year. They look upon him, further, as an individual who is likely to disrupt plans that contemplate reconciliation, a love feast, among the various factions of the Republican party. They have been struggling to lay a base for this love feast and because of the intense hatred that some of their number have for Mr. Hoover, his activity has opened this breach again, made it a blood-red wound.

Political observers and commentators have shown all manner of excitement because Mr. Hoover has made no statement whether he will or will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination. In plain words, they have been trying valiantly to conduct a campaign that will smoke out Mr. Hoover and make him say whether he is or is not a candidate.

All of the efforts to find out what Mr. Hoover proposes to do have failed and will continue to fail, even with the underground work of the New Deal, to bring from him a statement as to his purposes. He will announce them in his own good time and his statement will be definite when it is made.

Personally, from all of the information I have been able to assemble, I do not believe that Mr. Hoover has any intention of seeking the nomination. I am convinced his purpose is directed wholly and completely to one end: he fears the New Deal and he is trying with all of the power that he possesses to acquaint the country with his views which are obviously in opposition to the theories and policies and experiments of the New Deal. From sources which I consider to be faithful, because they always have been accurate heretofore, it is apparent to me that Mr. Hoover desires to lend his help in acquainting the country with the things in the New Deal which he regards as dangerous to our nation's well being and that beyond such a purpose he is content to enjoy life as a fisherman and vacationist.

But there is another phase of this situation which seems to me to warrant consideration. While some of the anti-Hooverites have been denouncing him, even calling him names under their breath, Mr. Hoover has done the Republican party a big favor. By his attacks on the New Deal; by his condemnation of the things in it which he regards as certain to be destructive; in short, by his activity which many construe as a campaign for the nomination, he has made the Republicans conscious of the job they have to do. He has awakened them and has put fight into them which three or four short months ago did not exist.

Mussolini at the Phone
Who Is the Man?
No Fear in Vatican City
A Shot at a Bird

Something new in war is Mussolini sitting in his office at the Palazzo Venezia in Rome, talking on a short-wave radio telephone with Gen. Emilio de Bono, his commander in chief in Ethiopia. Mussolini should have been photographed as he received the message, "We have just taken Aduwa, where 8,000 of our colonial troops, 6,000 of our Italian troops, were killed 40 years ago, and Italy humiliated." That was a proud moment in Mussolini's life.

Arthur Brisbane

After Mussolini gets the news by radio-telephone he telephones it to the Italian king's summer residence.

For a change from war, consider this incident. Before the entrance to the "Recess club" frequented by Wall Street's "Who's Who," stood George C. Haigh, banker; Matthew S. Sloan, who used to run New York's electric light and now runs the "Katy" railroad, a learned friend of Mr. Sloan's and this writer.

Mr. Sloan said, with finality that marks greatness, "Mr. Blank," mentioning the name of a well-known Republican candidate, "will be elected in 1936." Your narrator buttonholed the first man passing, a Wall Street denizen, well-dressed, asked him "Who is Mr. Blank?" mentioning the name of Mr. Sloan's candidate.

"Never heard of him, don't know who he is. Who is he?" the pedestrian replied and went on. Of the next ten, nine would have said, similarly, "Never heard of him," but all ten would have heard of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Republicans must take somebody whose name is known if they can find him; failing that, they would do well to select him now and see to it that his name is known before election day comes around.

Despite possibilities of widespread bombing of cities if "that war in Europe" should come, Vatican City, ruled by the pope, does not consider anti-bomb defense necessary. Osservatore Romano, representing the Vatican, denies reports that shelters against air raids would be provided in Vatican City. It says:

"The Holy Father has reason to believe that the dome of St. Peter's, regardless of whatever the occasion might be, is the most inviolable defense, firstly, because of the celestial protection of the Prince of Apostles, for whom the dome is the sacred sign and symbol, and because its mass indicates so clearly the holy place, respected and venerated during the most obscure centuries."

That the magnificent building erected by Michelangelo, with his priceless statues and paintings within it, would be respected by even the most barbarous invader seems certain.

Little things start big things. Doctor Potter, formerly professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin, one of an international committee of four that tried to settle a quarrel between Italy and Ethiopia in 1934, says that Italy has good ground for complaint against Ethiopia, and that a soldier's casual shot at a bird probably caused the present trouble.

Mr. Joseph E. Uihlein, an able citizen of Milwaukee, who takes information with him on his travels and is therefore able to bring information back, returns from England with the impression that, despite greatly improved conditions in Britain, English and other Europeans are expecting something unpleasant to happen. What it is, where it will start, what will cause it, nobody is prepared to say, but there is a feeling of apprehension, a vague anticipation of some catastrophic event.

The President assures the nation that on this occasion America will not meddle with what does not concern it.

What will the United States do about selling food to Italy, if, through "sanctions," the League of Nations tries to starve out the Italians, as Germany was starved?

If a chain is no stronger than its weakest link the chain that makes up the human race is not strong.

Authorities in Java report fifty natives of New Guinea, including seventeen children, arrested as "head-hunters." They got the heads of two natives women and ate the two women.

Mussolini spoke to twenty million Italians gathered in Italy's public squares, and to the people of the world. You could not mistake the meaning of that voice.

Newspaper men, gathered near the radio, said: "His voice made the shivers run up and down our backs, although we could not understand a word of it." Shivers do not often run up and down those backs.

Silo-Filling Is Important Work

Care Necessary to Prevent Moldy or Fired Spots in Silage Later.

By Prof. H. C. Hopper, New York State College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Care at silo-filling time prevents moldy or fired spots in the silage later in the winter when the feeders get well down into the contents of the silo.

In very tall silos where much pressure develops, the silage often keeps perfectly without being distributed or tramped; but only when moisture conditions are correct. It is advisable to level off and tramp the surface in all silos.

How to fill and when to fill depends largely on the condition of the corn. Dry corn should probably be distributed, tramped, and perhaps watered. Corn that has plenty of water needs little or no attention.

Two general plans of filling silos are followed. In one, the flexible distributor pipe is moved about constantly by an operator who tramps and levels the silage at the same time. More men are sometimes put in to help him.

The other plan is to blow the corn into the top of the silo without anyone in the silo to tramp or level the corn. In this way the lighter portions work toward the outside and the heavier portions accumulate in the center. This is likely to give an uneven grade of silage. If the corn is very ripe or dry and has more than 35 per cent of dry matter some may spoil along the sides. Corn with a good deal of water will pack closely and will be preserved by fermentation.

Red Fife Wheat Brought to Ontario From Europe

The progress of wheat northward, almost to the Arctic Circle, has been described as beginning in 1841, when David Fife, an Ontario farmer, asked a friend to send him some wheat from northern Europe. The friend got a handful of grain from a ship just docking at Glasgow from Danzig, says a writer in the Washington Star. Fife planted the seeds in his garden, but only five came up, two of which were eaten by a cow. From the three remaining plants came the so-called Red Fife wheat which proved so adapted to the climate of Canada and the northern United States that in the course of a half century it had spread over the greater part of the country.

This, in turn, was the foundation of the still more productive marquis wheat, which is credited with playing a major part in the allied victory in the World war. But with the extension of Canadian agriculture northward, came the development of still another wheat, the garnet, which ripens from 10 days to two weeks earlier than marquis and can be grown almost up to the Arctic circle. The problem is to get wheat from the Far north of as good quality as that grown farther south. One of the great wheat countries of the world is the Peace river district, north of Edmonton.

Lime Needs Time

On soil needing lime, alfalfa often fails if seeded before the lime has had time to correct the acidity. It is advisable to delay seeding until several months after the limestone has been disked into the surface soil. Some soils are slightly acid on the surface(one ton requirement), but have an abundance of lime in the soil underneath. Alfalfa grows well on such soils after the roots reach the subsoil. Seedings made on such soils immediately after liming are often successful. Also, if such soils have been manured recently, seedlings grow more vigorously and may reach the calcareous subsoil.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Indians as Corn Growers

The American Indians learned through trial and error how to grow corn under adverse weather conditions. In cold regions they added several days to the short growing season by sprouting the seed before planting. Records indicate that the ability of Indians to grow corn 400 years ago in semi-arid regions of the upper Missouri valley, in an are now considered unfavorable to corn production, was unsurpassed by any other tribe in America.

Storing Chopped Hay

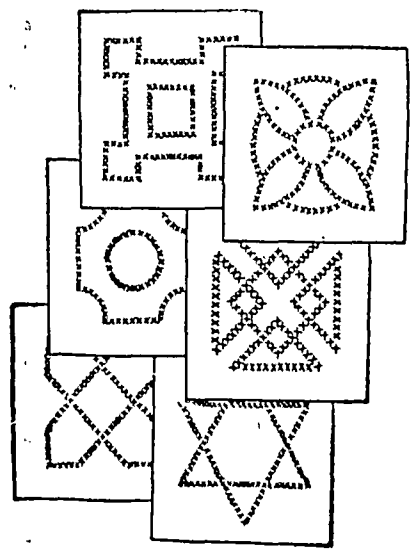
Chopped hay occupies about one-half to one-third the space needed for long hay. For this reason, advises a writer in Prairie Farmer, care must be taken to increase supports of many mows before chopped hay is stored since the weight of a mowful of chopped hay is considerably greater than the usual capacity weight of long hay. Since chopped hay has a tendency to heat more than long hay, it should be properly cured before it is stored.

Potatoes as Feed

Raw potatoes, even when clean and sound, are slightly bitter and are also somewhat laxative. Large allowances of potatoes, therefore, are likely to result in bloat and scouring, says the Montreal Herald. This difficulty is largely overcome by cooking the potatoes, especially for hog feeding. Such treatment also increases their palatability, and in general, makes them a safer feed. Where it is possible to do so, the water in which the potatoes were cooked should be discarded.

CROSS-STITCH QUILT BLOCKS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Cross-stitch is about the simplest thing in handwork. Little girls make their stitches in cross-stitch. These six-inch blocks are stamped in cross-stitch designs on white muslin and little girls to grandmothers will enjoy making them into everything from small dollies to pillow tops, scarfs and bedspreads. Easy to carry around, working one at a time and then assembling into article wanted when all the squares are finished.

Outfit No. 46-4 consists of 6 of these six-inch stamped squares and will be mailed to you for 10 cents.

Arabic in Everyday Use

Housewives of the world use Arabic in everyday conversation, said Dr. Henry Farmer when he lectured at Glasgow university, Glasgow, on "Arabian Influence on Western Civilization," recently. "Housewives, for instance, scarcely imagine that when they talk of sugar, cotton, damask, taffeta, orange, muslin, lozenge and perhaps soap and the loofa, they are using Arabic words," he continued. "Men of learning use Arabic continually, probably without knowing it. In medicine, 'alcohol' and 'alembic' and hosts of other words are pure Arabic, and again, when astronomers speak of 'zenith' and 'nadir,' and mathematicians of 'algebra' and 'cipher,' they are using Arabic words."

World's Most Famous Babies Eat Oatmeal

The Dionne Quintuplets, wards of the King, eat the same cereal that is eaten by millions of babies who don't get their names in the papers—oatmeal. The Canadian government chose a staff of special experts for the care of the Quints. And these experts, their scientific knowledge endorsing the instinctive choice of mothers the world over, have chosen oatmeal for the cereal of the famous five.

Oatmeal, eminent medical authorities agree, has an abundance of everything a child's cereal should have—body-building minerals, muscle-building protein, and the supremely important Vitamin B for keeping fit.

Food science says that Vitamin B is the best safeguard against those dangerous enemies of childhood—nervousness, constipation, and poor appetite due to lack of that vitamin in the diet.

Domesticated Wolves

The Moscow zoo boasts of two wolves which apparently are as tame and trustworthy as dogs. They were captured when they were puppies and ever since have been given kind and patient training. Their utter lack of viciousness and desire to return to their native element seems to indicate the fallacy of the belief that grown wolves become dangerous even though they have been trained from puppyhood.—Pathfinder Magazine.

SEAWEED IDEAL INSULATOR

Unexpected virtues have been discovered in the lowly seaweed. When tightly packed it forms an ideal insulating material, keeping out cold, noise, water, and even fire. Scientific tests prove that a mat of seaweed half an inch thick is more effective than a brick wall 12 inches thick. The seaweed has besides only one-fourth the weight of ordinary insulating material.

...but, after all is said and done, it's the cigarette itself that counts

... the question is, does it suit you?

Now, when it comes to a cigarette that will suit you . . . you want to think whether it's mild, you want to think about the taste

That Chesterfields are milder and taste better is no accident . . .

The farmer who grows the tobacco, the warehouseman who sells it at auction to the highest bidder, every man who knows about leaf tobacco will tell you that it takes mild, ripe tobaccos to make a good cigarette.

In making Chesterfields we use mild ripe home-grown and Turkish tobaccos.

Outstanding
.. for mildness

AT IS CONSERVATION?

...g the last decade, especially the last few years of that a great deal has been said conservation. The word is be- very common. We hear of Conservation Corps, the ency Conservation Work, the ation of natural resources, ow many have given thought meaning of the word "conser- ? The dictionary will give different definitions. One ion no doubt would be "to angly so as to impair as s possible" or again, it be "to preserve in the state ure."

believe, however, that the "conservation" has a broader and a deeper meaning than of those definitions. In de- the term might we not well to the use to which it is at- ed in order to draw up a de- n? For instance, one may upon some high point in a park and gaze out across the in a valley, or again, one may along a winding park road towering cliffs on the one and a noisy brook on the other e might stand upon the forest. banks of a lake and gaze out the white topped waves to a sunset, and these scenic views prove an inspiration of value only for a moment but in the that would come after. Again, may be scientifically minded some rock exposure telling a of a bygone age, some half- ealed wild flower, or the ob- ation of a chipmunk going fully along may offer an in- ation or perhaps an item of edu- on to those qualified to read the on. Again, some area may be sentimental or historic interest. ay be something connected with romance of your youth or the ory of the family, the county e or nation and a visit to this will revive old memories and obably prove an inspiration in nking of the things that have e before that enable one to face e duties of life with greater cour- .

Again, a lake may invite one to im in its refreshing waters or boat or fish. In winter, it may in- e one to skate upon its glisten- surface. All these recreational ivities will not only be ofmomen- y physical benefit but will help ild up a reserve for the future. Others perhaps may simply de- re to picnic in the great outdoors ong native surroundings, visit th their friends and neighbors for while and forget the humdrum ties of life for a time and ther- after go home refreshed in mind d body.

Then there are the comercial as- ects in the way of trapping and shing, which provide not only a ving for those that they take care of, but also contribute to the up- keep of society.

Running through all the phases above enumerated, namely, scien- tific, scenic, historical, recreation- al, social and economic, there is one common trend of thought in them all—that is the benefit of human- ity. Hence, we may well define con- servation as the wise use of our na- tural resources for the benefit of mankind.

We have given above a rather elaborate definition of the word "conservation," in order to provide a background amid ndicate its many phases; that it is not simply hunt- ing or fishing, not simply recrea- tional use of parks or preserves or any other one thing, but that it is a broad term in which practically everyone is or should be interested.

COOT OR MUDHEN

In Iowa very few hunters are not acquainted with the mudhen as it is commonly called. But a great many do not know it as the Coot. The American Coot it is and that is proper, and the Federal Regula- tions for taking migratory water- fowl include restrictions for the taking or killing of this common bird. It belongs in the same family group as the rail or gallinule.

Nevertheless in Iowa we have have our mudhen, but to make it more confusing, other States call the American Coot—Baldface, hen bill, chicken-bill, ivory bill, pond crow, pond hen, marsh hen, water chicken, rice hen, tule-chicken, tule-hen, mud chicken, chicken- duck, crowbill, pelick, pulldoo and Mother Carey's chicken.

It is still protected under the Federal regulations and during the open season on waterfowl, mud hens may be taken from 7:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m. each day. Only 15 may be taken in any one day and a person may not have more than 15 in his possession at any one time. The duck stamp is not required to shoot mudhens but one must be sure they are mudhens and not ducks "or else."

The papers tell of a $5,000 elec- tric range being installed in the White House. No limit when the tax payer pays the bill.

SAFETY IN HUNTING

Just as in the case of automo- bile accidents, so too does careless- ness and hurry take a toll each fall in hunting activities. Throughout the open hunting season news- papers carry accounts in glaring headlines relating to various hunt- ing fatalities. Every hunter should do his utmost to make the 1935 open seasons entirely devoid of un- necessary hunting accidents. This can be accomplished if every hun- ter will resolve to do his individual share to bring about such an elim- ination of accidents. It is the indi- vidual alone who s responsible for these accdents and brings sadness to many families as an aftermath to the hunting trip.

The exercise of a little added cau- tion and the realization that haste is so many times deadly will reduce hunting accidents to the minimum. Never point a gun at anything you don't want to kill. Nine times out of ten it is the gun that is presumed to be unloaded that kills or maims. Extra care should be exercised in crawling through a fence when hunting, or getting in and out of a boat with a gun. Be sure the muzzle is not pointed at yourself or one of your hunting companions, and above all, teach your son how to handle a gun and you will have gone a long way to insure his safe- ty when he accompanies you on your hunting trip.

In handing a gun to another per- son, pass him the weapon with the muzzle either straight up or down, never at an angle. Be careful that the muzzle of the gun does not be- come clogged with snow, mud or other foreign substance. Carry it so that the muzzle always remains clear of the ground with the muz- zle tilted downward in front of you or backwards and upwards over your shoulder.

Shooting near dwellings is par- ticularly dangerous and should be avoided. It is also a dangerous and oftentimes expensive practice to shoot near horses and live stock. The property of others should be given every consideration and in so doing accidents will many times be avoided.

The law provides that guns car- ried in motor vehicles must be con- tained in a case or taken apart with both barrels and magazine unload- ed. It is unlawful to shoot from a motor vehicle. These measures are safety measures and have done much to save the toll of human lives and stop disastrous injuries from hunting. It is impossible, how- ever, to make regulations which would insure all hunters against hunting accidents, so after all, it is up to the individual to brng about by himself ultimate safety in hunt- ing.

Compliments usually make peo- ple feel good and think well of the speaker, be he truthful or not.

LEGUMES GROW BEST IF LAND IS LIMED IN FALL

Put limestone on land this fall and give it an opportunity to react with the soil acidity for several months before seeding alfalfa or clover next spring, suggests Dr. P. E. Brown, head of the Soils De- partment at Iowa State College.

Fall liming will insure a better neutralization of the acidity and prevent any injurious effects of the soil acids on young plants, Brown says. Legumes will not grow satis- factorily on acid soils—making lime a necessity on many Iowa farms.

Correct Amount Essential

Before liming, the soil should be tested and its need for lime deter- mined. Samples of the soil will be tested for acidity by the Soils De- partment at Iowa State College and recommendations made, without charge. It is important to put on the right amount of lime as small amounts are usually not sufficient to combat the acidity of most of the soils of the state. The actual lime needs must be met if a vigor- ous stand of alfalfa or clover is ex- pected.

The limestone should be finely ground so that at least 60 percent is dust and the remaining particles should be no larger than a pea. If low grade lime is used, a larger amount should be applied. The lime should be disced with the sur- face soil but should not be plowed under.

"Eddie" & "Stub" Form Partnership

Edmund Josten and Ernest "Stub" Lewis have opened an electrical and radio shop in Klemme. The new business enterprise has quarters at the Lewis Produce Store.

The new shop, known as the Josten Electric Shop, will deal in radios and electrical supplies. "Stub" Lewis, who is an expert in radio work will look after radio servicing, while Edmund Josten will do electrical wiring and other service work.

LOCAL HUNTERS SHOOT GOOSE

Paul Grange and son, Dorance brought home a wild goose the other morning when duck hunting along the river. Now, that IS some- thing. And when it comes to shoot- ing we bet that Dorance can show his dad a thing or two and when it comes to giving credit for the goose —well, no doubt Dorance shot it!

2 Triple Programs At Avery Theatre

The Avery has a program of pic- tures next week to be proud of. On Thursday and Friday, October 31 and November 1, a triple feature program will be offered. Loretta Young and Charles Boyer, head a cast in the picture that has caused a furore wherever shown; "Shanghai" which tells a story of two lovers pitted against the unwritten law of China. As an added attraction "The March of Time," the dramatized news event feature will be shown for the first time; something new different and timely. You will en- joy the "March of Time." And the third unit added to this program is "The Voice of Experience." This is miss.

On Sunday, Monday and Tuesday Nov. 3, 4 and 5, another triple pro- gram will be offered. "Redheads On Parade" the whirly, girly, tuneful musical, that boasts that every girl in the cast is a Redhead. The stars of this show are John Boles, Dixie Lee (Mrs. Bing Crosby) and Jack Haley. "Major Bowes Amateur Hour of the Air" is another added attrac- tion on the same bill. You hear these talented amateurs on the radio, now see and hear them on the screen. 'Who Killed Cock Robin' the finest and funniest Silly Sym- phony cartoon rounds out the pro- gram.

These two triple programs are worth going miles to see. So make your plans now to see both of them. You will never see a better show.

TIMES HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Candles can be kept from drip- ping if placed in the ice box twenty minutes before lighting.

To keep rugs from curling up, sew dress weights on them at cor- ners or along the edge.

To prevent hot grease sinking into the floor, put cold water on it to harden; then scrape off what is on the surface with a dull knife. Remove the stain with a wet cloth sprinkled with baking soda.

When cream seems to thin to whip, place it in a bowl of cold water for a few minutes, then in a bowl of hot water, then in cold wa- ter. It will whip like magic.

Brown eggs beat better, hold up longer and make more when beaten

To prevent prune whip from fall- ing, leave in the oven until cold. It will never fall.

Put a few drops of vinegar in the water when boiling meat if you think it is at all tough. It speeds the process of cooking and makes the meat tender.

PAVING CREW READY TO POUR CEMENT ON KLEMME ROAD

"Well Begun's Half Done" When Making Your House Frock

There was never a truer phrase than that, and how well it applies here! For before you know it your dress is cut and ready to stitch. This pattern is so easy to follow. There's everything new about the lines of this fetching house frock, with its contrasting surplice facing and doesn't it look like a different dress when buttoned up to the neck. See small sketch—with those enormous buttons? When household chores are finished, button up the deep pointed surplice and wear the frock to market. It's smart enough. Try it in colorful novelty cotton or gingham.

Pattern 9614 may be ordered only in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards 36 inch fabric and ¾ yard contrasting. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

JUST AS GOOD

The lady customer entered the store and headed straight for the proprietor.

"You sold me some rotten apples yesterday," she said, "and I'm bringing them back to you."

"That's all right, lady," hastily apologized the merchant. "You needn't have taken the trouble to bring them back. Your word's just as good as the apples."

A Hard Job

"Yes," said the doctor, "you're worrying too much about yourself. The thing to do is to sink yourself in your work."

"Oh," groaned the visitor. "I'm a cement worker!"

STRATFORD — Home of the LEES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON OCTOBER 12 one of the most historic homes in this country was dedicated as a patriotic shrine. That was a fine old Colonial mansion in Westmoreland county, Va.—Stratford, home of the Lees. Within its walls were born two signers of the Declaration of Independence and two others who represented the new nation at European courts during the early part of the fight for liberty. It was the home of a dashing cavalry leader of the Revolution, and his son, born in Stratford, became commander-in-chief of an army in the greatest civil war the world has ever known and one of the outstanding military geniuses produced on this continent. It has been the home of one governor of Virginia, four members of the council of state and 12 members of the house of burgesses.

It has been said that an old house is a history in itself—its rooms are chapters, its furnishings the illustrations and its inhabitants the characters. Certainly few houses in America come nearer being a "history in itself" than does this 200-year-old brick castle that stands on a high bluff overlooking the historic Potomac. There's romance, too, in the story back of its preservation as a patriotic shrine.

That story begins—not in Virginia, as one might suspect, but in Connecticut—seven years ago. Early in 1928 Mrs. Charles D. Lanier of Greenwich, head of the William Alexander Jr. chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, while rummaging through a desk which belonged to her mother-in-law, Mrs. Sidney Lanier, widow of the poet, came upon a pencilled manuscript by Lanier, until then not known to exist.

The paper proved to be a speech he had made in Macon, Ga., in 1870, on the death of General Lee, in which he urged the establishment of a memorial "by contributions as shall be within the compass of the humblest citizen who loved him and who desires the grateful privilege of laying some tribute on his tomb."

On the following day Mrs. Lanier received a letter from a friend describing a visit to Stratford and asking why it could not be preserved. On the same morning she called a meeting of her organization, which resulted in the adoption of resolutions looking to the acquisition of the homestead.

After months of negotiations arrangements were made with Charles E. Stuart, the owner, for its purchase, and the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation was formed to acquire the property and conduct a campaign for contributions in all parts of the country. The price was fixed at $240,000. The mortgage was cleared away by an unconditional advance of $115,000 by a prominent Delaware woman whose name was not revealed. Early this year it was announced that a balance of $53,500 was still due on the purchase price and that an effort would be made to raise that amount. The campaign was successful and when the dedication took place on October 12 Stratford was debt free. Altogether more than $300,000 has been contributed by Americans from every state in the Union and by citizens of England, Belgium and other foreign lands for the purchase, restoration and perpetual care of the home of the Lees.

The founder of the Lee family in America was Col. Richard Lee, who was sent to the colony of Virginia late in the Seventeenth century as secretary and as a representative of the king's privy council. From time to time "The Emigrant," as he was affectionately termed in the annals of the family, received large and numerous land grants from the king and a part of this land was inherited by his grandson, Thomas Lee.

Thomas Lee's first home was at Mount Pleasant but when it was burned in 1729 by convict servants whom Lee had punished for some offense, he decided on a new home rather than attempt to rebuild the old one. Queen Caroline, wife of King George II, helped with a gift of 300 pounds for its construction and he selected a site on the banks of the Potomac in the general district of Wakefield and other noted Colonial homes occupied by families whose traditions included scholastic interests and cultural attainments. This section of Virginia was often referred to as the "Athens of Virginia."

The architecture of Stratford was characterized by solid walls and massive hewn timbers. It was erected in strength and solidity. Large open fireplaces throughout the house heated the large rooms indifferently during severe winters. The house was built in the shape of an H, the connecting link between the two wings being a large hall room 30 feet long. The wings were each about 30 feet wide and 60 deep. There were 18 large rooms besides the hall, in which family life was centered. The hall was used as a library and general sitting room. The walls, paneled in oak, were set with built-in book cases, which contained one of the finest early libraries in this country. In the kitchen was a fireplace 12 feet wide, 6 high and 5 deep, capable of roasting an ox of fair size.

Col. Thomas Lee, the builder of Stratford, was prominent in the history of colonial Virginia. He served as one of the commission to treat with the Iroquois Indians for the settlement of lands west of the Alleghenies. He became president and commander-in-chief of the colony of Virginia and was appointed governor but died in 1750 before the commission reached him.

Thomas Lee's greatest fame, however, rests upon the fact that he gave to his country six distinguished sons and a daughter who, marrying one of the Shippens of Philadelphia, bore a distinguished family of her own. The outstanding sons of Thomas Lee were the two oldest, Richard Henry Lee and Francis Lightfoot Lee, both signers of the Declaration of Independence. Richard Henry Lee, called the "Cicero of the Continental Congress," the "smooth-tongued chief, from whose persuasive lips, sweeter than honey, flowed the stream of speech," the man who dared to propose that "these colonies are and by right ought to be free and independent states," was born at Stratford in 1732. He received his education at the Academy of Wakefield in Yorkshire, England, then returning to Virginia he took up the study of common and Roman law and history. In 1757 he was made justice of the peace for Westmoreland county. He was elected to the house of burgesses in 1761, and continued a member of that body till 1788.

Francis Lightfoot Lee

While a member of that body he made the strongest speech against human slavery ever uttered by a Virginian. He made a motion "to lay so heavy a duty on the importation of slaves as effectually to put an end to that iniquitous and disgraceful traffic within the colony of Virginia."

He was a delegate to the Continental congress from 1774 to 1780, and served as president in 1784. He served in the state legislature, was a colonel of militia, and again a delegate in congress in 1787. He was a member of the Virginia convention of 1788. He was a member of the United States senate from March 4, 1789, until 1792, when he resigned. He died at Chantilly, Va., June 19, 1794.

Francis Lightfoot Lee was two years younger than Richard Henry Lee. Unlike his brother he was not sent to England but received an unusually good education in the schools of his native town and from private tutors. He was elected to the house of burgesses from Loudoun county in 1765 and later from Richmond county and served until 1772. He was one of the signers of the Westmoreland declaration against the stamp act.

He served as a member of congress from 1775 till 1779. He was on the committee which formulated the Articles of Confederation. He was one of the most ardent supporters of the rights of the colonists, and distinguished himself in calling attention to our rights in respect to the Newfoundland fisheries and the enjoyment of free navigation of the Mississippi. After the formulation of the federal constitution he served his state as member of the legislature. He died in Richmond county, Va., April 3, 1797.

Arthur Lee was born at Stratford in 1740. He was educated at Eton, England, later studying medicine at the University of Edinburgh from which he was graduated in 1765. After traveling extensively in England, he returned to Williamsburgh, Va., to begin the practice of law. He again went to England and served as the agent in that country and France for the colony of Massachusetts. He was appointed correspondent of the Continental congress in London in 1775, accompanied Benjamin Franklin to France in 1776 and was a commissioner to Spain in 1777. Returning to Virginia in 1780, he was chosen as state representative in 1781 and went to the Continental congress in 1782, serving there until 1785. He was a member of the treasury board from 1785 to 1789 and died on his farm near the Rappahannock river December 12, 1792.

The other three sons of Thomas Lee were William Lee, who became a minister to the Court of St. James; Thomas Ludwell Lee, described by John Adams as "the most popular man in Virginia," and Philip Ludwell Lee, who inherited Stratford from his father and who passed it on to his two daughters. The elder daughter, Matilda Lee, became the wife of her cousin, Henry Lee of Leesylvania, the dashing "Light Horse Harry" of Revolutionary war, the son of Lucy Grymes, the "Lowland Beauty" and enviable subject of George Washington's tender early verse. After the death of the "Divine Matilda" in 1790, "Light Horse Harry" continued to make his home at Stratford and three years later he married Anne Hill Carter of Shirley.

Richard Henry Lee, the son of the builder of Stratford, was the first Lee child born there. Exactly 75 years later, on January 19, 1807, the last Lee child was born in the same room at Stratford as his famous kinsmen, Richard Henry Lee and Francis Lightfoot Lee, and he was destined for a fame greater than either of them. His name was Robert E. Lee.

Robert E. Lee lived at Stratford until he was four years old when his family moved to Alexandria. Following the profession of his father, he entered the United States Military academy at West Point, from which he was graduated second in his class in 1829. After his graduation he became assistant engineer in the construction of what was known as Fortress Monroe in his native state. In 1837 he was ordered to the western frontier and for many years he served his country far from the banks of the Potomac, where stood his beloved "Arlington," the home of his childhood playmate, Mary Custis, and his own home after their marriage in 1831.

During the Mexican war Capt. Robert E. Lee became successively Major Lee, Lieutenant Colonel Lee and Colonel Lee, and General Scott declared that he was the best soldier he had ever seen in the field. In 1852 the "second man in his class" came back to West Point as its superintendent and that position he held until 1855.

In 1861 the guns of Fort Sumter shattered the hopes of a peaceful settlement of the differences between the North and the South. Lee was recalled from Texas to Washington and General

Henry Lee

Scott offered the soldier he had praised so highly the command of the Union army that was about to be put into the field. And to Robert E. Lee, pacing back and forth on the veranda of historic Arlington as he sought to make his greatest decision, must have come the words of his father, the famous "Light Horse Harry" Lee: "Virginia is my country. Her will I obey, however lamentable the fate to which it may subject me." So this was Lee's answer to Scott, as he sent in his resignation from the army, "Save in defense of my native state, I never again desire to draw my sword."

Then Virginia seceded from the Union and Robert E. Lee put on the Confederate gray. Within a year he proved that another name had been added to the list of great American captains. That is the name born by the foundation which will preserve for all time an American shrine—Stratford, home of the Lees.

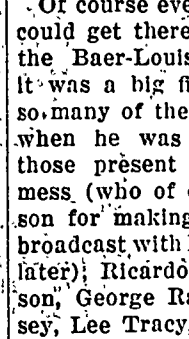
STAR DUST
Movie • Radio
By VIRGINIA VALE

THEY do say that "Shipmates Forever," the latest Annapolis picture, is going to make all of us burst into tears because it's so touching. Lewis Stone, Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell all gave excellent performances; in fact, it's claimed that the director, Frank Borzage, has made an actor out of Powell.

The picture was shown the other afternoon in a projection room, for a few hard boiled—very hard boiled — movie magnates. At the end one of them gulped, "Must have caught a cold somewhere; I seem to be sniffling."

"You haven't caught a cold, you fool," retorted another. "You're crying, but you won't admit it!"



Dick Powell.

Influenza, one of the greatest menaces to picture-making, caught up with pretty Claire Trevor recently; it was a serious enough attack to worry every one who likes the blond star.

Paramount brought Jan Kieupura to this country to make pictures with full knowledge of his temperamental outbursts, and ran into one at the very beginning. He hadn't learned to be nice to ship news reporters, for one thing (and it's as important to learn to be nice to reporters and camera men, if you have screen ambitions, as it is to apply make-up correctly, or speak without hissing when you face the microphones).

Then a tea was given for him, in New York, and when the guests arrived they were told that they were very welcome, but that the guest of honor couldn't be present. Rumors on the grapevine telegraph had it that he'd rushed off to the company offices to talk over business details that didn't quite suit him.

Of course everyone in Hollywood who could get there went to New York for the Baer-Louis fight, partly because it was a big fight and partly because so many of them had known Max Baer when he was in California. Among those present were Richard Barthelmess (who of course had another reason for making the trip, as he was to broadcast with Rudy Vallee a few nights later), Ricardo Cortez, Edward Robinson, George Raft, Wheeler and Woolsey, Lee Tracy, Wallace Beery, George Brent, Arline Judge (who'd come east to arrange for her mother to get an inheritance that was left to Arline), Isabel Jewell, and so many other movie people that it's hopeless to try to name them all.

Meanwhile Marta Eggerth has settled down in Hollywood to make pictures for another company. Like Kiepura, she's an opera singer (he was a sensational success when he was with the Chicago Opera) and some do say that she and he are married and that it's being kept dark so that publicity can be obtained by statements about their great romance, while others claim that they're romantic about each other, but not yet married. Take your choice.

Have you old-timers wondered what had happened to May Allison? Prettier than ever, she arrived in New York for the big prize fight, with her husband, a Cleveland millionaire.

If you go to Hollywood, and like Constance Bennett, and are a child, drop in at her house; she's left orders that she'll see all children who come to call. But—she doesn't want to see grown-ups who just bring children along as an excuse to get in.

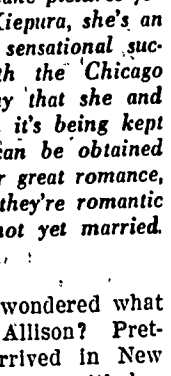
About Claudette Colbert, whose newest picture is "She Married Her Boss": It's said that she doesn't make it any too easy for anyone else to have too good a role in one of her pictures.

But—there's a good answer to that. The heyday of a screen star is very short. If she's starred in a picture she has to make it her picture—for the public will go to it, primarily, to see her. She can't afford to let someone else walk away with it. For instance, there's the case of Jack Benny, the radio favorite, in "Broadway Melody of 1936." Benny was one of the picture's big names, but he let little Sid Silvers write his own lines, and Sid walked off with the scenes they did together!



Miss Colbert.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Norma Shearer is still looking for some one to play "Romeo" to her "Juliet" . . . Who'd ever have suspected that Vet Boswell, of the famous Boswell sisters, would keep her marriage secret even from the family for a year? . . . Now it's Mary Pickford who's trying to sign up the quintuplets for pictures . . . Robert Montgomery put on quite a bit of weight while he was on that European vacation . . . Lily Pons, the opera star, is taking her movie work very seriously . . . A radio sponsor offered the Crown Prince of Spain a fortune to go on the air, and was turned down.

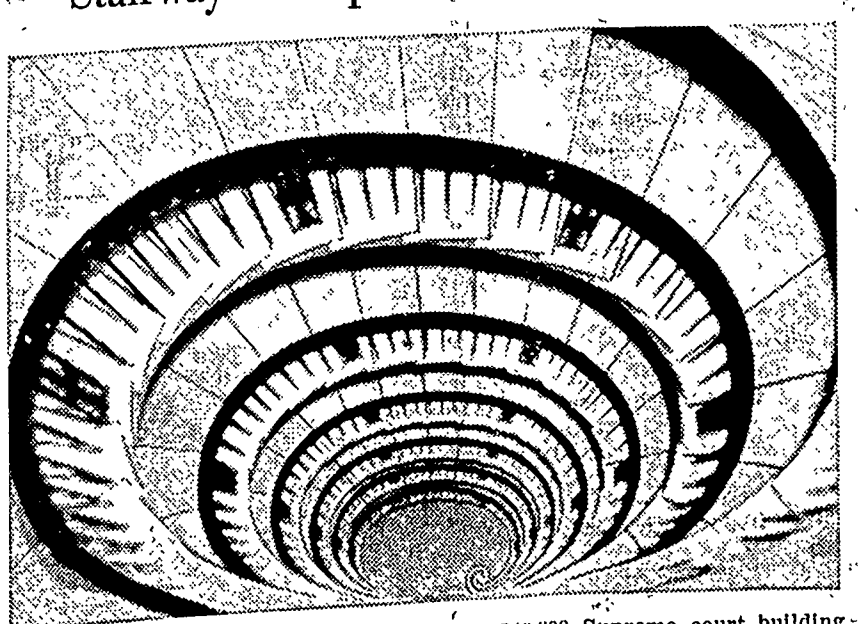
Motive power of each unit is supplied by two V-type, 12-cylinder, high-compression, two-cycle oil engines. The two units provide a total of 3,600 horsepower. It attained a speed of 111 miles an hour.

Stairway of Supreme Court Building



One of the remarkable features of the $9,740,000 Supreme court building, which was opened for the first time when the court convened for its autumn session, is the spiral stairway, of cantilever construction, shown in the above picture. The stairway, which seems to hold itself up without visible support, is fashioned of Alabama marble, like the rest of the building. Each tread extends into the wall on one side to the extent of 18 inches. There is no steel in the stairway, which is five stories deep. The picture was made from the top, looking down into the deep well.

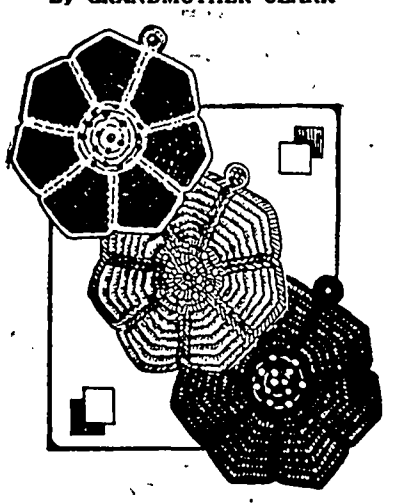
CROCHETED FLOWERS FOR POT HOLDERS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Pot holders crocheted with heavy string are very practical and when made in flower forms are really lovely. They are heavy enough to protect the hands without requiring padding. These three pot holders are crocheted in the same manner but in different combinations of red, yellow and green. The petals are crocheted separately of one color and then slip stitched together and finished in contrasting colors. Size when finished about six inches.

Instruction sheet No. 731 with illustrations and instructions how to crochet these holders, also how to arrange the colors, will be mailed to you for 10 cents. Material can also be bought from this department. Information and price are given when mailing instructions.

This Gold Was Scrap Iron

Rusty cannon balls and pieces of artillery alone have rewarded the efforts of a salvaging expedition to recover $5,000,000 of treasure from a warship of Russia's pre-war fleet, sunk near Helsingfors in 1721. Loaded with gold, plundered from Sweden, the wreck has always tempted treasure-hunters. But certain old documents suggest that it had been searched frequently during the Eighteenth century. Now the Helsingfors authorities have been startled by the announcement of a private diver, who declares that he investigated the wreck three years ago and found only valueless scrap iron.

Talking Birds, Animals, Are Few and Far Apart

Birds have widely demonstrated powers of conversation Among other animals cases of talking are extremely rare. There are three recorded cases of dogs talking, but in these cases an elastic definition of "talking" is required, observes a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

Dr. W. Reid Blair, director of the New York Zoological park, points out that the conversational abilities of dogs is much more apparent to their owners than to strangers. Dogs have a larynx and vocal cords and while they have possibilities for development this development has taken place to only a limited extent.

The best conversationalist in the animal kingdom is the Indian Myna, a small bird resembling the black bird or starling, states Doctor Blair. It surpasses the parrot or the crow. Talking by birds is an acquired art due to their contact with human society, and is a development of their power to mimic sounds. There is no evidence, states Doctor Blair, that birds which have acquired the art of talking in the human sense use this ability to talk when they are communicating among their own kind.

When animals are communicating with their own kind it is possible that they are using some method which was available to man in an earlier stage of development, but which he has lost since he developed the power of speech, Doctor Blair believes As to the nature of the method used there is not much information available.

Sulphur Once Condensed From Fumes of Volcanoes

Men have been familiar with sulphur since before the beginning of written history, notes Thomas M. Beck, in the Chicago Tribune. Ancient scientists were peculiarly fascinated by it. The fact that it usually was found near volcanoes, and that it was about the only known mineral substance that was inflammable, led them to regard it as a sort of solid form of fire, possessed with a cosmic importance almost equal to that of the gods. This feeling that there is something supernatural about sulphur has continued to the present day.

The ancients were correct when they attributed magical properties to the substance. It has been said without exaggeration that sulphur plays some part, either directly or indirectly, in the preparation of 90 per cent of all the things we use.

Where do we get our sulphur? Until about thirty years ago almost all of it came from the neighborhood of volcanoes, where, during past ages it had been condensed from fumes issuing from the earth's interior. There was not much demand for the stuff in ancient times except as a curiosity The first industrial demand for it came about the year 1500, when gunpowder, of which sulphur is an ingredient, began to come into general use.

Twenty-One Gun Salute

As far as our country is concerned we simply copied the 21 gun salute from the British; it has become the universal salute of powers of the first rank. The origin of it is not certain The old salute of one war vessel to another was of seven guns. Possibly the old mystical significance of the number seven set it at this figure Shore batteries, with better supplies of powder, came to be allowed to fire three guns to a ship's one. After potassium nitrate came into general use in the manufacture of powder (It does not deteriorate like the old sodium nitrate) the number of guns for the naval international salute was raised to equal the number of guns given by land forces—that is 21.

Charing Cross Gone

Up to the time of Charles II, Charing Cross stood among the fields in London. The name is derived from the Saxon word charrynge, meaning a turning. In 1291 Edward I erected at Charing the last of 13 crosses which marked the route of the funeral procession of his wife, Eleanor, from Grantham, Lincolnshire, to Westminster. The cross was taken down in 1647. A modern memorial cross may be seen inside the Charing Cross station yard. It will be remembered that Eleanor journeyed with Edward I to the Holy Land and sucked the poison from a wound dealt her husband by a Moor.

Discarded Gas Cans Popular

The discarded gasoline can is one of the most widely used objects throughout Asia and Africa. It is employed chiefly for carrying or storing water, milk, clothes and money. However, writes Katherine Gardner, Rapid City, S. D., in Collier's Weekly, there are whole towns made out of these flattened tins and some people turn them into musical instruments and bird cages. In Tibet those with sacred animals stamped on their sides are even used in the temples for the burning of incense.

The Spiritual

The spiritual is a unique form of religious folksong evolved by the southern plantation negro. It is rendered without instrument of any sort, the fervent hand-clapping, tapping and patting of the feet, and the rhythmic movement of the body known as "shoutin'." In this way is the true spiritual distinguished from that usually given by trained singers, from which, it is held, most of the real qualities are lacking.

Many Different Kinds of Synthetic Dyes Are Used

There are many different types of synthetic dyes, from the standpoints of both the chemist and the dyer, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. The earliest coal tar colors were either acidic or basic in nature, and so were well adapted to combine with the basic or acid groups in silk or wool, but were not so useful for cotton. Cotton frequently is dyed by mordant dyes, in which cases a metallic hydroxide, usually that of chromium, is used as a sort of adhesive between the fiber and the color; or else by the substantive dyes, which show an inexplicable affinity for cellulose.

The fastest dyes, however, and therefore the ones most frequently used, are the sulphur and the vat dyes. The former are dyes of unknown composition formed by cooking certain colorless coal tar derivatives with sulphur; they are soluble in sodium sulphide solutions and are applied to the fabric in such a form, after which they are fixed by oxidation. The vat dyes, of which indigo is an example, are reduced chemically to water-soluble, colorless substances, which are applied in solution to cloth, and then, on exposure to air, changed back into the insoluble colored material. The acetate rayons present a problem in themselves; however, there have been developed a number of dyes that can be applied to them, but to them only.

Lamu Called Dying City Also Hill of the Devils

From Mombasa to Lamu in the archipelago off the mainland of East Africa an avenue to the queerest island in the world is a point that interests visitors.

Lamu belongs to the Sultan of Zanzibar, and is rented from him by the British government.

Called by mainlanders "the dying city," Lamu was once the center of a large Arabic and Persian civilization, according to the American Express company High Arab buildings, with copper plated doors, line its streets and, defying gravitation, lean over the right-of-way in such manner as to give it the appearance of a covered passageway

Behind the living town is a hill where hundreds of mansions lie half buried under the drifting sand. People of Lamu call it the "Hill of Devils" and refuse to accompany visitors to the area.

Lamu women walk under a movable tent called shiraa, which in prosperous days were carried by slaves, but are now supported by four small sticks which the women hold as they walk. Like many other Lamu customs, it has been handed down from ancient times almost without change because of the absence of any outside influence on the life of the island.

Beds of Other Lands

Considering that about one-third of our lives are spent in bed, it is not wonderful that much trouble and expense are devoted to our sleeping places. In this country, observes a writer in the Montreal Herald, the healthy mattress has almost ousted the feather bed. French beds are noted for their hardness and German beds are very short. Many Norwegian beds are made to pull from recesses. The hammock rules in South and Central America. The Indians of Guinea plait most beautiful hammocks of grass The Japanese lie upon matting laid on the floor, with a stiff, uncomfortable wooden head-rest—a bed of torture to travelers from other lands. The Chinese use low bedsteads, often elaborately carved. Their only mattresses and coverlets are made of matting.

Greenwich Royal Observatory

Greenwich Royal observatory was founded in 1675 primarily for the purpose of improving navigation but soon became the time base for England and some other countries. It was not until 1884, however, that representatives of 26 countries met in Washington and decided the astronomical day for the world should also begin there at noon. This astronomical day must not be confused with the calendar day which arbitrarily begins at the International Date Line.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Queen Victoria's Dolls

Charles Morris' "The Life of Queen Victoria" says: "We are told that at one time she was the proud possessor of 132 dolls. Although very ordinary little Dutch toys, many of them with painted wooden faces, they have all been preserved with other mementoes of the childhood of England's remarkable sovereign. Most of the dolls represent ballet dancers of the Queen's childhood in costume."

Ophir

Ophir was a seaport or region from which the Hebrews in the time of Solomon obtained gold. The precise geographical situation has long been a subject of doubt and discussion. It was probably in India or perhaps southern Arabia; at any rate, it appears from scriptural mention of the place that it was accessible by water from the towns on the Red sea.

Salt Universally Taxed

Salt is not only one of the most important articles in the daily diet of mankind but one of the earth's most plentiful substances. Yet today it is so universally taxed that it continues to be a luxury, in fact the first luxury, of two-thirds of the human race.—Collier's Weekly.

Cave Man Was Forced to Eat His Hackberries

They Don't Tempt Even Rats of Today

"NOW eat your nice hackberry pudding. It's good for you."

Was this what the cave man's child had to listen to, at meal time in China almost a million years ago?

Dr. Ralph W. Chaney, research associate of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, is inclined to think life was something like that, from discoveries in the now famous cave of Choukoutien, 30 miles west of Peking.

Asia's oldest human inhabitants, revealed in their cave home, are becoming far more real than most of the world's early specimens known by bare bones. Reporting progress in reconstructing the home life and experiences of the ancient Peking Man, Doctor Chaney tells what scientific deduction makes of a layer of thousands of broken hackberry shells in the cave floor. American hackberries in the Southwest today are commonplace food to Indians who eat the berries raw, and also use them as flavoring for meat or bread. If the innumerable shells in Peking Man's cave were cracked by him for the seed-food inside, that is an important bit of news about man's diet almost a million years ago. If mere rodents ate them, not so important.

Authorities consulted by Doctor Chaney believed rodents would chew a hole, rather than crack shells. Caged rodents put to the test unfortunately refused to take any interest in hackberries. Caged monkeys were more responsive. They ate shell and all.

Altogether, Doctor Chaney concludes, it was probably Peking Man who left the shells, who gathered the hackberries from bushes and mashed them in preparing his meals.

"We can almost hear Peking Woman," says Doctor Chaney, "adjuring Peking Child, in a language lost in the obscurity of a million years, to eat his hackberry pudding in lieu of orange juice, or other vitamin-containing foods of the modern diet."

Dream Doctors Older Than Freud Unearthed Among the Cherokees

CHEROKEE Indians in North Carolina have dream doctors, who practice a primitive brand of psychoanalysis that was old long before Sigmund Freud was born.

How these Indian doctors treat disease by exploring the patient's dream life has been investigated by Dr. Frans M. Olbrechts, Belgian ethnologist, for the Smithsonian Institution.

Cherokee medicine men used to think of dreams as very powerful experiences that could actually cause an illness, Professor Olbrechts reports. But nowadays, perhaps through a touch of white man's influence, they lean more to the view that dreams are omens explaining the occurrence of a disease.

Following either theory, the dream doctor hunts for the guilty dream, even if he has to probe the patient's dream life for two or three years back. Once the disease cause is found, the doctor sets to work to make it let go its hold. The patient takes the herb or other treatment prescribed, confident that the evil is being chased out.

Among the dreams that Cherokee doctors find significant, are listed these:

Burning a foot, hand, or finger in a dream will be followed by snakebite.

Dreaming that your ball team wins a game means some one in the village will soon die.

Dreaming of a train journey with a companion means the companion will die within the year.

A nightmare of the long-haired little people of the hills, evil fairies, is a forerunner of insanity.

New Soviet Sky Giants Have 206-Ft. Wing Span

MOSCOW.—First scanty details of the design of the 16 giant airplanes which will take the place of the ill-fated "Maxim Gorky" have been released by the Soviet government.

The new planes will be of the all-metal monoplane type, powered by six engines, each of 1,200 horse power. The Maxim Gorky had eight engines of 850 horse power each.

Designed to carry from 60 to 70 passengers, the new planes will have a top speed of 167 miles an hour. The wing-span of each "ship" will be 206 feet, the over-all height 36 feet, the length 111 feet and the distance between the landing wheels 34 feet.

As planned the new airplanes will operate in horizontal flight, at normal load, with two of the six engines out of order.

Learning to Stand Is Roundabout Job, Says Dr. Thompson

At 4 Weeks Baby Does Better Than at 44

By MARJORIE VAN DE WATER
Science Service Staff Writer in Psychology.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—A four-weeks-old baby, lying in his characteristic position all curled up with his legs under his tummy, is in a more favorable position for getting up into an upright posture than he will be again until he is forty-four weeks old.

During the intervening weeks, he goes through a regular pattern or progression of typical poses which carry him in a roundabout way through the squirming and crawling stages toward the perpendicular pose which distinguishes man from the lower mammals.

But after he is four weeks old, it is not again until he is nearly eleven months old that he again draws his legs up under him into the best position for getting upright. This curious indirection in development was pointed out to psychologists at the meeting of the American Psychological association here by Dr. Helen Thompson, of Yale university.

Is Nature Inefficient?

"Nature appears to have followed a most inefficient plan," she commented. "Or is it that she has remodeled a primitive structure? It would be of interest to make a comparable study of primitive development to see if in the less highly organized animal, the developmental process is a more direct one."

Doctor Thompson, working with Dr. Arnold Gesell, has made a detailed study, by observation and motion pictures, of the growth and development of normal healthy babies of typical middle-class families. A sort of time-table of the poses achieved by 50 per cent or more of babies at various age levels has been worked out by Doctor Thompson and was shown here.

How Baby Learns.

At four weeks the average baby can lift his head momentarily, but typically rests with back arched and knees and elbows drawn up under him. By eight weeks he can hold the head up for a period. At 16 weeks he can raise his upper chest. By twenty-eight weeks he can raise himself up enough from the prone position to lift one arm. From that time on the arms are gradually brought back under the body until the chest and later the whole trunk can be raised up. Still the legs are not working right for crawling, so at this stage the baby frequently pushes himself backward in his efforts at crawling. When forty-four weeks old, he can raise himself enough to push himself into a sitting position from being flat face down. By forty-eight weeks he can really creep. And when he is fifty-six to sixty weeks old, he is able to push himself up into a standing position without aid.

Find Colony of Ants, Each Part Male, Part Female, at Trinidad

NORWICH, ENGLAND.—Sex mixups of a most fantastic kind, involving at least one-fourth of the population of a large colony of ants, were described here by the noted American entomologist, Prof. William Morton Wheeler of Harvard university.

The colony was discovered on the British-owned island of Trinidad last spring, by Dr. N. A. Weber, and was studied jointly by Dactor Wheeler and himself.

The mixed-up condition consists in each affected insect being partly male and partly worker-female or "neuter." In many, the front part of the body looks like that of a male and the back part has a female appearance. In others, "islands" of femaleness appear in the midst of male areas, and vice versa. No two of the insects thus far examined are alike in either the degree or distribution of their sexualities.

In the particular species to which this colony belonged, Doctor Wheeler explained, the males have longer legs than the females. Some of the "sex-assorted" ants had male legs on one side and female legs on the other. The result was that they could travel only in circles, like the famous but fabulous "side-hill gouger" of western American myth.

No Onions! No Coffee! College Girls Declare

ROCHESTER, MINN.—Cauliflower, onions and coffee head the list of foods disliked by a group of college girls, and cabbage, tomatoes and peppers are the foods most commonly blamed by the girls for causing indigestion, Drs. W. C. Alcarez, H. C. Hinshaw and Ruth J. Frank have reported to the Mayo clinic here.

The information was obtained from 100 college girls of Spartanburg, S. C., who were questioned as to their food tastes by Doctor Frank. Doctors Alvarez and Hinshaw, of the Mayo clinic, wanted the information to round out a study they recently made of patients coming to the clinic suffering from functional types of indigestion.

Italian Goods Boycotted by the League

WHILE Premier Pierre Laval of France was still trying desperately to find a way of settling the Italo-Ethiopian quarrel that would be acceptable to both Great Britain and Italy —apparently without regard to Ethiopia's real interests — fifty-two members of the League of Nations declared a boycott on all Italian goods and an embargo on various key exports to that country. The boycott binds these nations to prohibit importation of "all goods consigned from and grown, produced or manufactured in Italy or in Italian possessions from whatever place they arrive."

Pierre Laval

If rigidly enforced, this would cut off about two-thirds of the export trade upon which Italy depends in getting funds for prosecution of the war in Africa. The countries applying the sanctions agree to aid one another in compensating losses by increased trade facilities, credits, cash and loans if possible, and discriminating against league members such as Austria and Hungary which continue to trade with Italy.

Austria, Hungary and Albania spoke against the sanctions. Switzerland, which seeks to preserve her traditional neutrality, was silent. Some South American republics made complicated reservations.

It was decided that the sanctions should be put in force on October 31, and Laval thus had time to continue his peace efforts. These seemed to center on a way to "legalize" Italian occupation of that part of northern Ethiopia which Mussolini's troops have seized and to arrange for Italy's partial control over the entire empire.

European Tension Lessened by Diplomatic Juggling

IN THE course of his negotiations, which were given approval in the French elections, Laval worked hard to dissipate the threat of hostilities between Great Britain and Italy. In this he apparently was fairly successful, at least for the time being. He asked the British to withdraw some of their battleships from the Mediterranean and Mussolini to call back a lot of the troops he had sent to Libya as a threat to Egypt. At first the British cabinet rejected this proposition, but there were reports that it might yield the point.

Sir Eric Drummond, British ambassador to Rome, informed the Italian government that Britain would not undertake any action in regard to the conflict in Ethiopia, "beyond what is demanded by its collective obligations in its quality as a loyal member of the League of Nations, nor beyond what might be agreed to or recommended by the league on conformity with the dispositions of the pact."

Laval's reply to Great Britain's query as to whether France would support Britain and co-operate with her fleet in the Mediterranean in case of Italian attacks was still somewhat uncertain but seemed to satisfy the British.

Warns Italy Against "Unfair" War Methods

IN A long and solemn statement the Ethiopian legation in London warned Italy that its "ghastly methods" of warfare, the use of poison gas and dum-dum bullets, would have dire results.

The legation stated that Italy's use of "unfair and ultra-civilized methods of warfare," of which the legation says it has impartial substantiation despite public denials by Ambassador Dino Grandi of Italy, "will lead to the most unfortunate consequences, not only to Italians who will, of course, deserve it, but to all white peoples as well."

The whites, the statement said, "will be intensely hated by all the peoples of Africa and, we think, of Asia also for years to come."

The statement warned that it will not be possible to restrain the wilder section of the Ethiopian army from retaliating in some similar savage method on Italian soldiers who may happen to fall into their hands.

Italians Win Victories in Southern Sector

GEN. RUDOLFO GRAZIANI'S forces in southern Ethiopia were reported to have won several important victories in their advance toward Harrar and the railway. They captured some towns despite desperate resistance by the natives, and took many prisoners. The main movement in that region was up the Webbe Shibeli river. The Ethiopians were repeatedly dispersed by aerial bombardment.

In Tigre province, on the north, the Italians were consolidating their positions and preparing for another big thrust toward Addis Ababa. Their line there extended nearly 70 miles from Adigrat through Aduwa to the holy city of Aksum.

Italian aviator-scouts reported that Ethiopian troops were digging in at Makale, about 60 miles southeast of Aduwa and the next logical objective in the Italian campaign of occupation, forming a major concentration for a desperate effort to frustrate the next attack.

From Dessye, Ethiopia, came a story that Danakil warriors had cut off and surrounded between 500 and 700 Italians in the hills southeast of Mount Mussa Ali, and that the latter were very short of food and water.

Helena, Mont., Hit by Series of Quakes

HELENA, capital of Montana, and all the western part of that state were terrified by a series of earthquake shocks extending through a number of days. There were only two fatalities, but numerous buildings were wrecked or so weakened that they had to be razed. Hundreds of persons were driven from their homes, and the suffering was intensified by a sudden fall of the temperature to below freezing. Fortunately the gas mains of the city were not broken. National Guardsmen patrolled the business district and all public places were closed for days.

Senator William E. Murray and Representative John P. Monaghan surveyed the damage, and Murray, terming the quake "one of Montana's worst disasters," said he would go by airplane to Washington ask immediate help.

Arthur Henderson, Peace Advocate, Is Dead

ARTHUR HENDERSON, president of the world disarmament conference and a most determined foe of war, died in a London nursing home. He was seventy-two years old and had been ill for a long time, so ill that he had not been permitted to see a newspaper for six weeks and did not know that another war had broken out and that the peace of Europe was threatened. The former iron molder of Glasgow who became a leader of the Labor party and was foreign secretary when it was in power, was awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1934. His crusade for peace and disarmament was inspired by the death of his eldest son in the World war. He was a gentle, much loved man, a genuine idealist whose latter years were made sorrowful by the repeated failure of the disarmament conference to get results.

Arthur Henderson

Death of General Greely, Arctic Explorer

DEATH came to an eminent American, Maj. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, U. S. A., retired, at the age of ninety-one years. He passed away in Walter Reed hospital, Washington, and was buried in Arlington national cemetery with full honors. General Greely was universally known as the leader of the ill-fated expedition into the Arctic regions in 1881 from which only he and seven others returned alive. But he had already served in the Civil war with distinction, and his later scientific accomplishments won him international fame and recognition. On his ninety-first birthday, last March 27, he received a medal of honor from congress "for his life of splendid service."

General Greely was one of the original organizers of the National Geographic society, and a member of the board of trustees continuously for 47 years from the date of the society's founding in 1888.

Williams Asks Care for "Unemployables"

ALL states and communities have been asked by Aubrey Williams acting WPA administrator, to make better provisions for the care of "unemployables," for federal aid for the needy will soon be confined to providing jobs. In an interview Mr. Williams said that with six states already cut off the dole, progress of the work relief program would bring liquidation of relief administrations in "the great majority of the remaining states" during November. This will leave those physically or mentally unable to work, the aged, mothers with dependent children, and other handicapped families and individuals, dependent upon local efforts.

"It will be next year before the social security program becomes operative, and the states have got to take the responsibility," he said.

President Roosevelt's order that all employment projects be under way or ready for contractors' bids by October 22 could not be complied with by any agency except the PWA with its $133,000,000 slum clearance and low cost housing program. The next deadline is December 15, when Mr. Roosevelt said all heavy construction—public works' $330,000,000 of work, river and harbor improvements and rural electrification systems—should be under contract.

Dr. Hugh S. Magill Objects to Snoopers

DR. HUGH S. MAGILL, who as president of the American Federation of Investors has been annoyed by congressional investigators, has written to all members of congress a letter asking whether American citizens "still have the right to express their approval or disapproval with respect to pending legislation without being harassed by 'inquisitors.'"

The federation opposed the recent enactment of the "death sentence" for "unnecessary" holding companies and was under investigation by the senate lobby committee.

In an open letter to senators and representatives, Magill said he had "refused" to permit representatives of the committee "to read my personal and private correspondence." He asserted the federation "is not a lobbying organization as that term is commonly used."

"Having thus been confronted by these inquisitors sent out by a committee of the senate," Magill wrote, "may I inquire in all seriousness whether or not you approve of such action? If you do approve, how can you justify such procedure when the Constitution specifically provides that 'the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated'?"

Senator Vandenberg Not Candidate for Anything

SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan, who has been mentioned frequently as a possible Republican nominee for the Presidency, came back from a summer tour of Europe and declared flatly he is "not a candidate for anything on earth." He did not attempt to predict who would be named by the Republicans, but did say he felt the G. O. P. would win in 1936.

Senator Vandenberg

"I think President Roosevelt wrote his obituary in his first speech in congress in March, 1933," he said, "and historians will show it, when he said 'most liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policies and we must take care to avoid that.'"

Liberal spending by the New Deal was defended by Senator Fletcher of Florida, chairman of the senate banking committee. In an interview he said that "government activities and expenditures have restored about $10,000,000,000 of bank credit lost in the $21,000,000,000 deflation of 1930-33.

"Business is going to get the benefit of that. The money the government is putting out is going to people who are putting it in the banks. It is increasing purchasing power and likewise expanding the credit facilities of the banks."

Republicans Happy Over Bay State Election

IT DOESNT take much these days to cause the Republicans to rejoice. The latest event hailed by them as a harbinger of victory next year was merely a by-election in Massachusetts to fill a vacancy in the state senate. The district normally is Republican and this time as usual a Republican was elected. The reason for the G. O. P. shouts was found in the decreased vote polled by the Democrats, and the fact that Salem, a mill town and former Democratic stronghold, was captured by the Republicans.

Industrial Union Bloc Loses Warm Fight

JOHN L. LEWIS, president of the United Mine Workers, and his industrial union bloc lost a hot battle when the American Federation of Labor, in convention in Atlantic City, voted to continue the policy adopted last year in San Francisco. This policy was to organize workers in mass production industries, such as automobile and steel, along industrial lines with due protection of the rights of craft unions.

Lewis and his followers proposed that the mass production industries be organized, one union for each industry, with the craft unions kept out altogether.

William Green was re-elected president of the federation and next year's convention was awarded to Tampa, Fla. Proposals for the formation of a national Labor party were defeated.

Rumanians Try to Oust King Carol's Friend

CAROL, king of Rumania, celebrated his forty-second birthday at his summer palace in Sinaia, and as the family gathered for the occasion Mme. Magda Lupescu, the king's intimate friend, arrived unexpectedly from Paris. The Peasant party had intended to make the day notable by "anti-Lupescu" demonstrations, hoping this would help to keep her in exile, but her return confounded the leaders.

King Carol

The agitation against Magda has now taken a decided anti-semitic turn, her enemies circulating broadsides calling attention to her Jewish origin and charging that through her influence a large number of Jews are getting easy jobs in the public service.

HOW ARE YOU TODAY

DR. JAMES W. BARTON Talks About

Reducing Weight

AS YOU know, there are two main classes of overweight. The first is made up of those who have always been heavy; were big babies or put on a great amount of weight at puberty—14 to 16 years of age. The second is made up of those who have simply eaten more than their bodies required and because they are overweight take little or no exercise.

The first type is spoken of as endogenic obesity (overweight) because the cause is within themselves—glands that are not active enough—and the second is called exogenic obesity because it comes from outside the body—eating too much food.

However, whether the obesity is due to the glands or to eating too much, the reduction in weight to a very large extent should be accomplished by cutting down on the amounet of food eaten.

Dr. G. Arany, Berlin, stresses three points for those whose overweight is due to overeating. (1) Cutting down on the amount of food eaten; (2) increasing the amount of exercise taken which calls for more oxygen to burn or use up the body tissues, and (3) regulating the water exchange by increasing the amount of urine manufactured by the kidneys.

Dr. Barton

Doctor Arany suggests that the individual be examined, weighed, the metabolic rate measured (rate at which the body processes work) and when the food intake be reduced by as much as 20 to 30 per cent below the food intake that these measurments require. He suggests that bulky foods such as cabbage, lettuce, celery, spinach, fruits, vegetables (except potato), graham bread, breakfast foods from whole grains (oatmeal, shredded wheat) be eaten in large quantities because there is so much roughage (fiber) remaining after digestion. These foods have less fuel value or calories than more concentrated foods and also help to prevent constipation.

The foods that are rich or concentrated and do not have much roughage are sugar, white bread, highly milled breakfast foods, meat, potato, fats, and milk. These foods should be reduced in amount.

The second point, muscular exercise, is very important, as exercise increases heart and lung action and the increased oxygen coming into the lungs burns up the fat tissue in and on the body. He warns those who are overweight to begin with light exercise and gradually increase it; the strength of the heart, lungs, and circulation or blood pressure being carefully watched.

The third point—the water balance—is very important as overweights carry an excess of water in proportion to the excess in fat. As mentioned before, one pound of fat carries three and one-half pounds of water with it, simply because fat tissue holds so much more water than an active tissue like muscle.

Water is removed from the body (and water means weight) by simply cutting down on the amount of fluid taken—water, tea, coffee, soft or hard drinks—by inducing sweating by steam or Turkish baths, and sometimes by taking drugs to drive out fluids by way of the kidneys.

It is amusing to see an overweight individual weigh himself, take a fairly long Turkish bath and lose three to five pounds and when he is ready to leave, weigh himself again only to find that he as heavy as before he took the Turkish bath. This is due, of course, to the fact, that after emerging from the bath, he drank a number of glasses of water which replaced the water removed from his body by the Turkish bath. The removal of the water and its replacement was good for him, but it prevented the loss of weight.

Boxers, jockeys, and others who must "make" a certain weight by a certain time often have the weight removed by the Turkish bath, but drink little or no water, and so are able to make the desired weight.

Doctor Arnny's suggestions to reduce weight are in accord with those in general use—less food, more exercise, less water or other fluid.

Danger of Overweight

Dr. L. G. Graves in his book "Foods in Health and Disease" says, "An excess of fat is detrimental to health and is a predisposing factor in degenerative diseases of the heart, blood vessels and kidneys. An accumulation of fat around the heart handicaps its action while the increased body weight adds to the work demanded of it and a large percentage of overweight persons have high blood pressure."

Dr. E. P. Joslin, Boston, the outstanding authority on diabetes, warns those who have a family history of diabetes against the danger of becoming fat. He believes that those with a family history of diabetes may escape diabetes by avoiding overweight. He believes also that overweight is the most common cause of diabetes.

KNEW HIS DOG

Nobody seemed to take much notice of Green. He tried to get in a word now and then, but somebody with a stronger voice always took command of the conversation.

At last the talk turned on the subject of dogs, and Green felt sure that his chance would some, for he owned a dog of which he wns proud.

"There are some dogs," remarked Robinson, "that have more intelligence than their masters."

"That's right," said Green; "I have one like that."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

On Second Thought

"Those men for whom you failed to get government positions were rather indignant."

"Only for a little while," replied Senator Sorghum. "Since they found how much more they can make in private employment they're honestly grateful."

Important Consideration

"Every woman ought to learn to swim."

"Perhaps," replied Miss Cayenne. "And yet it would spoil so many romances if all a girl had to do when she thought she was drowning was to rescue herself."

TOO SWIFT

He—Come on in, I'll teach you to swim in 15 minutes.

She—I prefer Jimmie. He promises to teach me in one day.

Minding His Business

Father—Jim, how many times have you been whacked at school today?

Jim—Why, dad, I don't know why you should ask that question. I never take any notice of what is going on behind my back.

It Was the Horse

Man—I was riding a high-spirited horse today.

Friend—I'll bet you felt like a million bucks.

Man—No, that's the way the horse felt about it.

In Agreement

"It looks like rain," said the boarding-house waitress as she set a bowl of soup in front of one of her boarders.

"Yes, it does," he replied, getting a whiff of it, "but it smells a little like soup."

Bare-Headed

Little Billy preferred bald-headed babies, so one day when his mother informed him that Aunt Ethel had a little baby girl, he said:

"Oh, I hope it's a bare-headed baby."

He'd Be Ex-tar Good

Jane—If a sailor was hurt and went into business, why would he have to be a retailer?

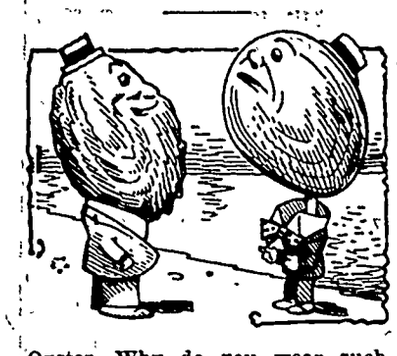
Joe—Because he wouldn't be a whole sailor!

He Should Know

Judge—You mean to tell me you committed all those robberies alone! Why didn't you have a partner?

Prisoner—Well, I'll tell you, judge, I wasn't sure he'd be honest!

IN STYLE



Oyster—Why do you wear such a large collar, Mr. Clam?

Clam—This was the smallest I could get. I'm one of the Little Necks, you know.

Unofficial Police Check Violations

Traveling Men, Legion and Kiwanis Aid State Highway Patrol

Des Moines—Lew Wallace, motor vehicle department superintendent, said that an "unofficial police force" of more than 1,000 Iowans checks on traffic violations in the state.

The department receives an average of 40 reports a day on violations from the unofficial force, which is composed mainly of members of the United Commercial Travelers' association, the American Legion and Kiwanis clubs.

Violation Is Investigated

Wallace said the bulk of the reports, which give the place, time, license number of car involved, and a description of the violation, come from traveling men.

The department finds the name of the car owner from the license number files, and if the violation is serious a highway patrolman is assigned to the case. If the infraction of traffic laws is only minor, a "warning letter" is sent to the car owner.

Points Out Dangers

The warning letter says "It has come to the attention of this department" that the car was involved in a traffic violation and states the number of persons killed and injured in the state annually as a result of such violations. It then asks the car owner if he "wants to be the cause of adding to the toll."

Failure to head stop signs heads the list of violations reported. Next on the list is reckless driving, with improper lighting and passing school busses coming third and fourth.

LABOR

By Grace Noll Crowell

Surely there still is labor for man's hands;
Surely the heart shall not be thus bereaved
Of its fine dignity. The untilled lands
Await him, there are forests yet uncleaved,
And the dark caverns hold within their dim
Vast aisles their stores for him.

And yet today there go the wistful-eyed:
The beaten ones down every lane and street
Begging for that they have been denied;
Dragging their helpless way on leaden feet;
Haunted by clutching hand and hunger cries
A fear within their eyes.

God, bring us through this labyrinth men
Have made in blindness—guide us, Lord!
Give back to hearts the joy of work again;
The joy of service with its sure reward.
Have pity, and forgive our crass mistakes
Before the heart of mankind breaks.

Corn-Hog Program Favored By Farmers

REFERENDUM POLL INDICATES CONTINUED C-H PROGRAM

A recent statement issued by Chester C. Davis, administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, received by S. J. Oberhauser, county agent, indicates that another voluntary contract will be offered for both corn and hogs.

"The need for increasing the present pork supply of the nation, a supply sharply reduced by drouth, will be kept in mind in plans for the next adjustment contract for corn and hogs," Mr. Davis declared.

"In both the 1934 and 1935 programs the producers developed and followed directions for use of land taken out of corn, which greatly stimulated planting of legumes and other soil building crops," The new contract will be more specific on that point.

"In common with other new contracts offered for 1936, it will require that an area at least equal to the number of acres withdrawn from production of crops covered by the contracts must be added to the normal area on the farm devoted to soil-conserving and erosion-preventing uses.

"It is only natural that we should be pleased with the apparent approval of the adjustment given by corn and hog farmers. As I view the result, however, the AAA was not on issue as such. The real issue was whether adjustment should be continued in an effort to prevent future over-production which would bring low prices and disaster to the farmers.

"It is too early yet to know the size of the vote, but indications are that it will at least equal—and probably 2,500,000 farms produce lots registered last year. In that event, we would, in my opinion, have an expression which would effectively represent the views of the men who produce most of the country's corn and hogs.

"Although it has been estimated that some corn and hogs are grown on approximately 4,500,000 farms, probably 2,500,00 arms produce for for home consumption only.

"Of the remaining two million, a large number sell such a limited quantity of either corn or hogs, that the direct effect of the adjustment program upon them is comparatively small.

"I would like to emphasize that more than a million farmers, who produced three-fourths of the nation's hog crop and considerably more than half of the corn, co-operated in the 1934-35 corn-hog programs."

45-Cent Corn Loan Is Recommended By AAA

The new 45-cent corn loan is a continuation of a policy first inaugurated in the fall of 1933 to enable farmers to market their crop in a more orderly fashion, says S. J. Oberhauser, county agent.

The Commodity Credit Corporation recently approved recommendations of the AAA for a loan of 45 cents per bushel to the eligible farmers on corn properly stored and sealed on the farm and has asked the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a committment to provide funds for the loan.

Loans under the new program will be limited to the corn producers who are cooperating in the corn-hog adjustment programs. They will be available on or after Dec. 1 on field corn that has been husked and stored in the ear in suitable cribs sealed in accordance with the laws of the State in which they are located. The loans are to be made only on corn which, if shelled, would grade No. 3 or better. Officials feel that it is desirable to store only the better grade of corn for future needs and to feed the lower grade of corn as promptly as possible in order to prevent spoilage.

Cribs will be sealed this year only if they are of such construction as will permit proper storage for a period of 2 successive years. Cribs must have suitable floors and weather-proof roofs.

The Government realized 100 per cent collections on loans made to about 213,000 farmers under the 2 previous corn loan programs.

IOWA FULL OF FLY-BY-NIGHT TRUCKERS GIVING BAD CHECKS

DES MOINES—Heads of two state agencies warned Iowa farmer against a corn trucker bad check racket they said swindled corn growers out of thousand of dollars in recent months.

Glen Schmidt, state bureau of investigation head, and M. P. Conway, railway commission chairman are co-operating with southern Iowa sheriffs and Missouri authorities in an effort to run down fly-by-night truckers who buy corn, give rubber checks in payment, and sell the corn in Missouri.

The officials said half dozen truckers were fined or given jail sentences for participation in the racket within the last month.

Conway said the "thieves on wheels" offer a slightly higher than market price in Iowa and whisk the grain into Missouri where they sell it for cash at a discount.

"No truckers operating under a recognized firm name are engaged in this racket," Conway said.

IOWA TO BE FREE OF BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS DEC. FIRST

Winneshiek, Allamakee, Chickasaw and Buchanan Counties Seek Rating

Des Moines:—All of Iowa's 99 counties will be marked up in the modified accredited list of counties for bovine tuberculosis by Dec. 1. This prediction came from Dr. H. A Seidell, chief of the animal industry of the state department of agriculture, who announced that three more counties have been scratched off the non-accredited list.

The three new modified accredited counties are Plymouth, Butler, and Grundy, bringing the total now in the modified accredited area to 95. Counties still unaccredited are Winneshiek, Allamakee, Chickasaw, and Buchanan.

Has Spurred Action

Counties in the modified accredited area contain less than one-half of 1 per cent infection.

The Chicago board of healths' action in plading a butter embargo on Iowa counties not in the modified accredited area spurred action in getting the work done as quickly as possible.

Fayette county was put on the accredited list shortly after the butter embargo became effective. Bremer county was placed on the list about a week ago.

Seidell said, "It is very important at this time that the work be completed as soon as possible, due to the fact that Chicago and other eastern cities have barred all dairy products originating from non-accredited counties."

He said the work of re-accrediting herds for three years is also complete in Jefferson, Van Buren, Clark, Linn, Hancock and Lee counties.

New Dollar Bill To Be Issued

Washington:— The government will issue next month a new dollar bill described by Secretary Morgenthau as 'the handsomest ever.'

It will be a silver certificate and though the size will be the same as the present currency, there will be changes in design.

For the first time on any American money, there will be printed a picture of both sides of the great seal, which was adopted in 1782 even before the constitution was drawn up. This seal will be on the back of the money.

On the front will be several changes of design, including the new way of printing signatures. Instead of being printed with the rest of the design, the names of the secretary of the treasury and the treasurer will be added later, with steel dies, after the bills are numbered and sealed.

Follow-Up Meeting

The follow-up meeting for this part of Ell township in the Womans project of the Farm Bureau work, will be held this week Friday, Nov. 8th at the home of Mrs. C. J. Wille. The meeting is called for one o'clock. Any lady interested is invited to attend.

NILE WILSON PASSED AWAY SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1ST

Interment Was Made In Beautiful Memorial Park Cemetery

Relatives, neighbors and friends gathered at the Fred Wilson residence in Liberty township Sunday afternoon to attend the funeral service of Nile F. Wilson.

Rev. Wm. Zabilka, pastor of the Liberty township Methodist church, spoke on the words "The Greatest Investment."

Eight young women of the Church, Mary Lange, Ruth Abele, Mildred Schoenwetter, Madalena Abele, Mildred Gast, Florence Tanner, Irma Schoenwetter and Novella Beier, sang "No Disappointment In Heaven," "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" and "Sometime We ll Understand."

He was carried to his final resting place by his cousins, Richard Potter, Richard Fox, Jarvis Fox, Benton Potter, Bert Potter and Lynn Friesenbong. Interment was made in Memorial Park cemetery.

The many beautiful Chrysanthemums and Roses spoke eloquently of the love and esteem which was held for this young man by his friends.

Obituary

Nile Freddie Wilson was born in Dallas County, Iowa, Sept. 25th, 1914 and passed away November 1 1935 at the age of 21 years, 1 month and 7 days, at his home in Liberty twp., Hancock Co., Iowa.

He was the second eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Wilson. Nile's passing was very sudden. He was sick only two days and death was caused by pneumonia.

Nile moved to Lake township, Cerro Gordo county, with his parents in 1920. He attended and graduated from the Lake township schools.

He leaves to mourn his death, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Wilson; five brothers, Harold, Robert, George, Henry and Billy, at home; three sisters, Miss Margie Wilson of Clear Lake, Mrs. George Hommon of Monona, Iowa, and Mrs. Walter Byerly of Pontiac, Mich.; two neices, Beverly Jean Ones, and Betty Helen Hommon; also his aged grandmothen, Mrs. Pricilla Potter, Ventura, Iowa; and a host of other relatives and friends.

Nile was a very kind and loving boy who will be sadly missed by all.

AGED RESIDENT OF GARNER PASSED AWAY

Garner:—Funeral services for Mrs. Wilhelmina Upmeyer, 88, widow, who died early Wednesday at her home here, were held Saturday at the Reformed church in Garner with the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, Klemme, pastor in charge.

Wilhelmina Kropp was born April 1, 1848, at Fursenthum, Lippe Detmold, Germany, and came to America, settling in Warren county, Mo., at the age of 26, where she met and was married to Ernest Upmeyer on Aug. 26, 1873. They came to Hancock county, settling near Garner in 1876, retiring 35 years ago and came to Garner. Mr. Upmeyer died Dec. 29, 1924.

Six children survive, Mrs. Emil Solms, St. Mary, Ohio; Mrs. William Brouwer, Garner; Mrs. Charles Strate, Rockford; William, Ralph and Arthur, all of near Garner. Twenty grandchildren and 12 great grandchildren and one brother, Henry Kropp, 90, at Klemme, survive. Interment was made in the Ell township cemetery.

Have You Mental "It"? You Will Often Need It!

Professors, Mechanics Both Require "G"

By MARJORIE VAN DE WATER
Science Service Staff Writer.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—College professor and skilled mechanic both need "G."

But this sort of mental "it," which may also be called mind-power, is needed in different amounts as compared with special talents.

Pure physical strength and the sort of fancifulness that enables you to see pictures in clouds or ink blots are the only human abilities encountered in a comprehensive program that do not need "G" at all.

This is the message brought to American psychologists meeting here, by Prof. Charles Spearman of the University of London, who addressed the American Psychological association.

Test 1,200 Studetns.

A grand total of 92 tests designed to measure the whole gamut of human abilities was given to 1,200 students, in the course of Professor Spearman's research. Every one of the 92 abilities, including such widely different matters as tapping rapidly with a pencil and working arithmetic problems, involved more or less of the general factor, which Professor Spearman has made famous as "G."

"G" is not what is generally spoken of as general intelligence, but extends far beyond the range of that ability, Professor Spearman explained. It is the mental side of what has been called the "mass action" of the brain's whole outer layer or cortex.

"G" and "IQ" Unalike.

Much of what is measured by current tests of intelligence or "IQ" is not the "G" factor at all, but another general factor linked with language. This seems to be nothing more than a capacity to link any symbol with a meaning. Yet it plays a large part in the most exalted mental operations such as reasoning, Professor Spearman said. It is present in all linguistic activities.

It is not, however, nearly so widely present as is "G," but underlies only about twelve of the abilities tested. It is involved in the ability to acquire general information.

No High Brows on "Highbrows," According to Dr. Ales Hrdlicka

WASHINGTON.—"Highbrows" do not have high brows. Negroes and Eskimos have higher foreheads than the proud Caucasian.

These and other data, upsetting to anyone who bases his claim to superiority on the height of his forehead, are offered by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, anthropologist of the United States National museum, in the new annual report of the Smithsonian institution.

Measurements on many hundreds of skulls in the museum collections, as well as on the heads of living men and women, show that the average forehead height of "Old Americans," of the white race is 2⅝ inches. American Indians have foreheads hardly a thumbnail-thickness higher. But American negroes have foreheads averaging 2¾ inches high, and Eskimos 2⅞ inches.

Averages among various white races show Armenians to be the lowest-browed, with 2⅜ inch foreheads. Irishmen have the highest foreheads, 2⅝ inches. Hungarians and Frenchmen rank next to Armenians as "low-browns"; Old Americans and Germans next to the Irish as "highbrows."

But lest anyone take undue credit to himself for racial superiority in forehead height, Doctor Hrdlicka makes it clear that this measurement has nothing to do with intellectuality.

Baby Laughs First After He's Been Fed

NORWICH, ENGLAND.—Baby's first laugh lights up his tiny face for the simplest of possible reasons: he has been hungry, now he is fed, and he is satisfied. Later, he learns to laugh for other causes.

Dr. C. W. Valentine, professor of psychology at the University of Birmingham, patiently watched a lot of babies of all ages, noting when and why they laughed, and collating the causes. At the meeting here of the British Association for the Advancement of Science he reported what he had learned.

First laughter by a baby, he said, is traceable to a definite satisfaction: being fed. Later, at about three months, the baby will laugh when some one else laughs—he has learned social laughter.

Water From Sea—Water Worth More Than Ocean Gold

Fortune Awaits Man Who Can Extract It

DETROIT.—Want to get gold from sea water? Then learn how to get the water out of sea water. Some cheap process of getting fresh water out of the salty ocean would bring gold to its discoverer and aid the future welfare of millions of people.

This is the exclusive statement to Science Service from the man who, two years ago, set the scientific tongues wagging and has been ever since the storm center of controversy over his pronouncement that:

"It is no more impossible to extract gold from sea water now than it was to extract bromine from sea water ten years ago."

That man was Thomas Midgley, Jr., director of the American Chemical society and vice president of the Ethyl Gasoline corporation here.

Can't Date Prediction.

The prediction still stands, Mr. Midgley contends, but he adds, "In no way, shape or form does it imply that gold will be extracted commercially from sea water in any given length of time."

Mr. Midgley's statement has consistently been interpreted in the press to mean that gold would be extracted from sea water on a commercially profitable scale within ten years.

An Exciting Challenge.

"There is a much bigger problem associated with sea water," Mr. Midgley said, "upon the solution of which depends the future welfare of millions of people. This problem is the commercial extraction of water itself from sea water. No one can say that water is present in too small a quantity to be recoverable. The present price paid for water in arid lands for irrigation purposes indicates that the value of the water in sea water is about the same as the value of the bromine at present prices.

"What more enticing research problem could anyone ask for, an unlimited supply of raw materals, an unlimited market with unlimited profits and unlimited benefits to humanity?"

Birds Teach Great Minds Something About Learning

A WOUNDED canary which will never fly, but which has learned to reach a tree-top. Another canary which has lived his whole life isolated in a sound-proof cage where no bird song could penetrate, which has taught itself the natural song of its species.

These creatures are teaching psychologists new facts about how learning takes place.

The case of Billie Burke of the broken wing is reported by Dr. Gustav Eckstein of the University of Cincinnati. Billie disliked her isolation on the floor away from the other birds who fed on the table top. Sympathetic Doctor Eckstein guessed at that from her pathetic attempts to jump up there, and prepared for her a spiral staircase of sticks fastened to a table leg.

On the third morning after it was built, Doctor Eckstein found that Billie had made use of the stairs. She was on the table top feeding.

After a week or two, Doctor Eckstein thought to make use of a similar device to make Billie's life happier. Birds like to roost high for sleep, but Billie could not fly. So Doctor Eckstein found a small tree, stripped it of its lower branches, made a staircase of sticks around the trunk, and placed it in the laboratory for Billie. In 30 seconds she was perched at the top.

Spirit Mediums May Be Dual Personalities

NORWICH, ENGLAND.—Are spiritist mediums persons with dual personalities? Are their "controls," the shadowy personalities that purport to give them messages from the other world, merely their other, "opposite" selves?

A suggestion that this may be the case was offered before the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science here, by Whately Carington, well-known English psychologist.

Mr. Carington subjected a considerable number of mediums, both in their normal condition and in the trance state, to what psychologists call the word-association test. This consists in the examiner saying one word, and the subject answering with the first word that comes into his mind. The answer gives a picture of the mental state of the subject.

Thus, to the word "ball," a small boy might answer "bat," while a debutante might answer "dance," and a soldier "cartridge."

A person with dual personality, who is his "own opposite" in the second mental state, might give opposite reactions to the same test word. Take the most famous dual personality in fiction, Stevenson's Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and say "cane." The benevolent Doctor Jekyll might respond, "take a walk," while the murderous Mr. Hyde would exclaim, "beat him up!"

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

TREASURE OF COMPANY K

THERE is gold—$10,000 worth of it, in good American coin—hidden near Crittenden, Arizona. At least, it is there if reports are true, and if someone has not found it and spirited it away.

Company K was stationed at Fort Buchanan. The Civil War began to call in soldiers from the outlying posts, and Company K was no exception. It was ordered east, and there was no time to take care of the goods and chattels of the organization.

So the quartermaster, a thrifty soul who had no idea of leaving anything valuable to the mercies of outsiders, quietly took the gold, the medicines, and all other stores of value, and buried them. He and the squad who helped dig the hole knew where it was, but no one else was told the secret. Then the company traveled east, and the incident was forgotten.

After the war, Company K was sent back to its Arizona post, which had been renamed Fort Crittenden. Only one of the original outfit returned with the troop, and as he looked about at the formerly well-known scenes memory stirred, and he remembered that he had helped dig holes, place in them gold and medical supplies, and cover them over again so that no one could tell they were there.

He had no doubt that the places were untouched, for no one that knew of them had been near in all this time. What a treasure there was, just for the taking!

So he told one friend, and the two began to hunt for the precious caches. They went to the place where the stuff was buried, as nearly as the soldier could remember, and here they dug—and dug—and dug again, but for some reason they could not seem to connect with the stores or the money.

The secret leaked out. Soon all the garrison was helping in the search. Trenches were dug all over Sonorita valley, and the men developed mighty muscles and aching backs—but to no avail.

Then, just as everyone was ready to give up in disgust, declaring that the returned soldier had been crazy all the time, a discovery was made. The medical stores were found, just as he had described them. New hope revived the hunt. More trenches were dug, and these went deeper.

They had their work for their pains. Unless, as has been said at the beginning of this story, the gold was found and spirited away under the noses of a whole suspicious garrison, it must be where it was hidden. For no one has found even so much as one coin of it.

THE BRYFOGLE MINE

THREE men were crossing the Nevada desert in 1866. One was an old Dutchman named Bryfogle, and the others were young southerners, who had come along with him on a prospecting trip.

Out in that lonely land the three found a ledge which seemed to be very rich in gold, and they each staked a claim and took some samples to be assayed when they should reach a town.

At Austin, Nevada, they had the ore tested, and it proved rich enough to excite Bryfogle immensely. The younger men, who felt that they had seen quite enough of desert life, made over their claims to the Dutchman and went on their various ways. But Bryfogle, optimistic desert rat that he was, set about organizing a company to go out and develop the mine, and he succeeded in interesting a number of men.

The party started out in high spirits, expecting to go directly to the ledge and there start to work. But the route seemed to be entirely too long and torturous; Bryfogle led them first in one direction and then in another, and at last, after several weeks spent in wandering about the desert, the old Dutchman confessed that he had lost the way.

At first, in the sudden depression of their spirits, the party was wrought up almost to the point of lynching the old man. Still, such an action would not help matters, and second thoughts showed them that there was nothing to do but return to Austin.

Bryfogle did not agree with this decision. He wanted to stay in the desert, to hunt still longer for the ledge which he knew lay out there somewhere. If they would only leave him some provisions, he said, he would keep on searching, and then he was sure to find the place at last.

With the hope that this might happen, the party yielded to Bryfogle's pleas. They gave him provisions for a long stay, and returned home, while he set out to run down that elusive ledge.

He might have found it if circumstances had been favorable. But in his wanderings he met a band of Paiutes, and they attacked him, striking him on the head. He escaped with his life, but his memory was gone. After that he wandered about aimlessly, not knowing for what he was hunting.

Others have wandered ever since, just as aimlessly, in search of that rich ledge of ore. But it seems to be lost for good.

New Grain Aids Cattle Feeders

Oats, Wheat, Barley, Corn, in Combinations Show Good Results.

By E. T. Robbins, Animal Husbandry Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Combinations of the various small grains recently threshed on farms are now being used to good advantage by cattle feeders to carry their herds along until the new corn crop becomes available. With favorable cattle prices in prospect, feeders plan to keep the animals gaining as rapidly as possible and then put on the finish with the new corn this fall.

Among the combinations showing good results are oats and wheat, oats, wheat and barley, or oats, wheat and corn where corn is available. These grain rations along with good pasture and legume hay, so plentiful in the state this year, have produced good gains and furnish a fairly economical way of keeping cattle gaining until more corn is available.

Some operators are buying corn to continue the feeding program which they started in the spring. In cases where cattle fed in this manner have been sold, they have paid a good return on the feed and risk which was involved in the venture.

Cattle feeders are also making plans to conserve all the roughage available for next winter's feeding, since last winter they found that roughage is an economical feed for wintering cattle as well as a good supplement to grain rations where the animals are being fattened for market.

The silo is expected to be the most popular place for the storage of corn fodder and corn stover as well as many other types of roughages. Pit silos are especially suitable, since they may be constructed at a relatively small cost to take care of the extra amount of roughage crops expected this year.

Apple Pomace Good Cow Feed, Tests Indicate

Large and increasing quantities of apples are ground and pressed in the manufacture of cider. In the past, little use has been made of the press cake or pomace which is often allowed to accumulate in huge heaps outside the building housing the cider press.

It has been the popular belief that apple pomace was comparatively worthless, or even dangerous, as a feed for live stock. Consequently, most of these pomace piles were allowed to decay or were hauled away as refuse. The pomace is highly palatable, and if animals were allowed free access to it they would likely eat enough to cause them to founder or bloat.

Several agricultural experiment stations have shown by feeding comparisons that silage made from apple pomace has nearly the same feeding value as corn silage.

Pomace stored in drums or barrels for two or three months before opening lose only a very small amount through surface spoilage. Otherwise it keeps in perfect condition, except for an apparently harmless discoloration of the portion in immediate contact with the iron walls of the containers. It is highly palatable and can be used in much the same way and to the same extent as corn silage.

Low-Cutting Corn Sled

Some farms are too small and others do not plant enough acreage in corn to justify purchase of a corn binder. In such instances corn-cutting with the old-fashioned hand knife is a slow and toilsome job. But Uncle Sam has come to the rescue of such farmers by designing a corn-cutting sled which costs little to build, cuts two rows at a time and with which two men and a horse can cut as much in a day as with a standard one-row binder. It cuts so low on even ground that little stubble is left in which corn borers may hide and saves from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds more fodder to the acre.

Removing Horns

Live horn has very little hollow space. When dried or dead the inner horn can be readily removed leaving the hollow outer shell. On the cow, says the Rural New-Yorker, horn is living tissue, and will bleed if cut sufficiently deep any place except near the tip. Some may cut the horn high with the mistaken idea it is more humane; actually it decreases bleeding very little if any. Cut the horn close to the head taking a thin ring of skin all the way around.

Farm Water Systems

Using pipe that is too small is one of the commonest mistakes in farm water systems, says A. G. Tyler, agricultural engineer, Minnesota University Farm. Ordinarily, one-inch pipe is the smallest that should be used. Small pipe cuts down the pressure tremendously between the pressure tank and the point of delivery.

Value of Proved Sires

As all dairymen know, it is not difficult to find a registered bull that will materially increase the productive capacity of his daughters above that of their dams, so long as the latter do not produce more than 250 pounds of butterfat a year. But when a herd of cows has been developed to the point where their average yearly production reaches 400 pounds, the finding of a bull that is good enough to even maintain that production is a real problem.—Wallaces' Farmer.

AIR ICICLES

Ice is almost as dangerous to aircraft as fog. It has forced planes to fly into the ground, and has driven them so low that they have struck obstacles. Block ice, forming round wires and all edges designed to cut the wind, sometimes causes a fatal increase in weight and head resistance, as well as distorting the flying surfaces which supply "life" to the machine. The thickening of one bracing wire will decrease speed by 15 miles per hour.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

EATS OATMEAL TO HELP KEEP FIT

● It may be one of Nature's lowest cost foods, but lucky is the boy or girl who gets it for breakfast every morning.

Many are nervous, poor in appetite, system out of order, because their daily diets lack enough of the precious Vitamin B for keeping fit.*

Few things keep them back like a lack of this protective food element.

So give everyone Quaker Oats every morning. Because in addition to its generous supply of Vitamin B for keeping fit,* it furnishes food-energy, muscle and body-building ingredients. For about ½c per dish.

Start serving it tomorrow for a 2-weeks test. Quaker Oats has a wholesome, nutlike, luscious appeal to the appetite. Flavory, surpassingly good. All grocers supply it.

By ETAOIN SHRDLU

One good thing about commercial beer—when the minister is calling you don't have to worry about a bottle of home brew exploding in the closet.

Believe it or not, but there is a man on Main Street who cut the buttons off his shirt sleeve because they hurt his nose.

There isn't anybody on earth as sophisticated as a girl smoking her first cigarette thinks she is.

They say Steve took his girl into a booth at a local cafe. "I would like to propose a little toast," he began gallantly.

"Nothing doing," said the lady. "I want a regular meal."

We've often wondered how the dickens a Klemme butcher always picks up a chunk of meat that is exactly the price asked for.

What every woman craves—a wrist watch that will run, and a pair of hose that won't.

Petting, says a medical authority shortens life. There's little doubt that it shortens single life.

Sure times are getting better. We saw a man go into the theatre Tuesday with his hat on his head instead of in his hand.

The new cars are now on display all boasting of greatly improved brakes this year. Drivers now, instead of running over a pedestrian can stop right on top of him.

Best Joke Heard This Week

A paper salesman told us of the two ladies, a number of years ago, who stopped at a livery stable and asked for a gentle horse to drive. The livery man brought out one, saying. "This horse is perfectly gentle so long as you don't let the rein get under his tail."

Within a few hours they returned. "How did you get along?" asked the liveryman. "Oh, just fine. Had a couple of showers while we were out, but we took turns holding the umbrella over the horse."

And comes the new gasoline, in jelly form. So far it comes in only one flavor; later you can have your choice of six delicious ones.

Tip to girls: Remember that the silent fisherman gets the most fish.

Mybe you can't believe everything you hear, but you can repeat it.

EAGLES PROTECTED BY LAW

Numerous reports of eagles being shot and mounted for display purposes causes State Conservation authorities to warn the public of the penalty provided by law for killing these birds. Under the State regulations the eagle is classified as a non-game bird but no open season is provided. State rules prohibit the killing of any wild bird classifed as non-game, except the European starling, the English or house sparrow, blackbird, bluejay, crow, sharp-shinned hawk, Coopers hawk and great horned owl.

Federal laws, as well, protect the eagle and it is unlawful to kill the bird which is used on National emblems and many coins.

TRAPPING SEASON OPENS NOVEMBER 10

Trappers are busy cleaning traps and arranging for locations to set traps with the season opening officially on November 10. The season is 5 days earlier than in 1934.

The trappers are reminded by the Conservation Commission that the placing of traps cannot be lawfully done until 12.01 a. m. November 10. It has been thought by some that traps could be placed the night before the season opens.

A baby had come to bless the home of the minister, and the little church had made up a gift of $50 for him.

"I'll bet he returns thanks for the money before he does for the baby," one elder whispered to another just before the services started the next Sunday morning.

In his prayer the minister gave thanks "for the timely succor sent us." The vicars aren't sure yet who won.

A local man was walking along the street when he saw a crowd of boys sitting in a ring with a small dog in the center. "What are you doing with that dog?" he asked.

"Whoever tells the biggest lie gets the dog."

"I'm surprised at you, boys. When I wsa your age I never told a lie."

There was a moment of silence, then one of the boys said, "Give the man the dog."

"How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "that you are the only man who doesn't meet his obligations?"

"I run a newspaper," he meekly answered, "and the brethern who stood up are my subscribers, and—"

"Let us pray," exclaimed the minister.

Irish Wolfhound Big Pony and Brave as Lion

Rarest of all Irish dogs is the Irish wolfhound, a dog big as a pony, brave as a lion, gentle as a lamb and ugly enough to frighten one out of his wits, asserts an authority in the Washington Star. He is the dog of the Irish kings and like them has been extinct for a good many years. However, unlike them he has been resurrected from degenerate descendants of the original seasoned with a little foreign blood. In spite of that he is still a noble animal.

Another Irish breed that is little known is the Irish water spaniel. This dog is a sort of brownish red, whereas the wolfhound is a red brindle. The Irish water spaniel is probably a mixture of standard poodle and spaniel. His smooth face and curly hair suggest the former; his retrieving and general sporting abilities suggest the former. He is an odd-looking fellow with his funny topknot, his shrewd eyes and his rat tail, but he is an able workman and a fine friend.

Completely characteristic of the Irish is the national terrier, a red-haired, impulsive, quick-moving dog that goes through life with a chip on his shoulder and dares the world to knock it off. His nickname is Dare-devil, and it is one he deserves, for he'll tackle anything and generally come out the victor. Though he is quick to pick a fight, he is full of affection and is one of the most loyal of friends.

Probably the best loved of all the Irish breeds, as he is undoubtedly the handsomest and best known, is the Irish setter.

Oyster Cultivator Must Provide Proper Surface

Science has even gone so far as to put a window in an oyster's shell in order to observe its life-processes and method of reproduction. The oyster is not static from infancy, but spends some time as a free-swimming organism. As its shell grows and becomes weighty, it sinks until it finds rest on something solid. If this be good clean rock all is well, but if it be mud or soft sand it cannot survive. Millions perish by having bad luck in their search for a suitable bed.

That is why the oyster cultivator does his best to provide a surface of a suitable nature, writes an authority in Tit-Bits Magazine. Old shells, slates, or tiles coated with lime and sand are usually chosen, and on these artificial rocks the oyster settles for the remainder of its life with no interests except sustenance and growth. It strains gallons of seawater through its natural filtering apparatus, thus extracting the mimite organisms which provide its food.

The oyster has numberless enemies which are as fond of it as the human gourmet. Of these the starfish is the worst. The victim's only protection is its power by means of the adductor muscle of clamping the two halves of its shell tightly together.

Trillions of Stars Now Seen Via Telescope

A universe of imagination staggering size, with 300 trillion stars already within the range of the astronomer's largest telescopes and unknown numbers still unseen, was described by Prof. Harlow Shapley of Harvard university at the convention of the National Academy of Sciences meeting at the University of Michigan.

In only a portion of the sky, 76,000 galaxies of stars, of which our Milky Way is a typical example, have been charted, said Professor Shapley. He expects that eventually 300,000 galaxies will be mapped in the heavens, with an estimate of about a billion stars of which our own sun is an average sample in each galaxy.

Stars which appear reddish in color have been thought to be very far away, but now Dr. Joel Stebbins of the Mt. Wilson observatory, California, reported to the academy that some red stars located in the Milky Way are four times closer to us than has been estimated.

A layer of "cosmic dust" which splits the Milky Way makes the stars on the far side appear red, just as our sun appears red at sunset, when its rays come to the observer through a longer distance of the dust-filled atmosphere of our planet.—Scientific American.

Cosmic Rays

The cosmic rays is still an orphan, coming almost uniformly from above, day and night alike, with no more, most investigators say, from the sun and stars than from the direction of "empty" space.

Because the cosmic rays are so very short, scientists suspect that they are very close to the ultimate kind of radiation. Discovering their source may lead to the hoped-for mechanism whereby men will understand how radiation transforms itself into solid matter and then is rejuvenated somehow to keep the fires of creation burning forever.

Days of Snuff-Taking

In France, during the Sixteenth century, Catherine de Medici set the fashion of taking snuff for headache. During the period of the Louis' the making of boxes as well as the taking of snuff was regarded as a fine art. Louis XIV employed the best goldsmiths of France for the making of his snuff boxes and had studios built for them in the garden of the Tuileries. The boxes were often of great value. A French gallant prided himself on having a different box for each day of the year, some collections numbering as many as 600 and 800.

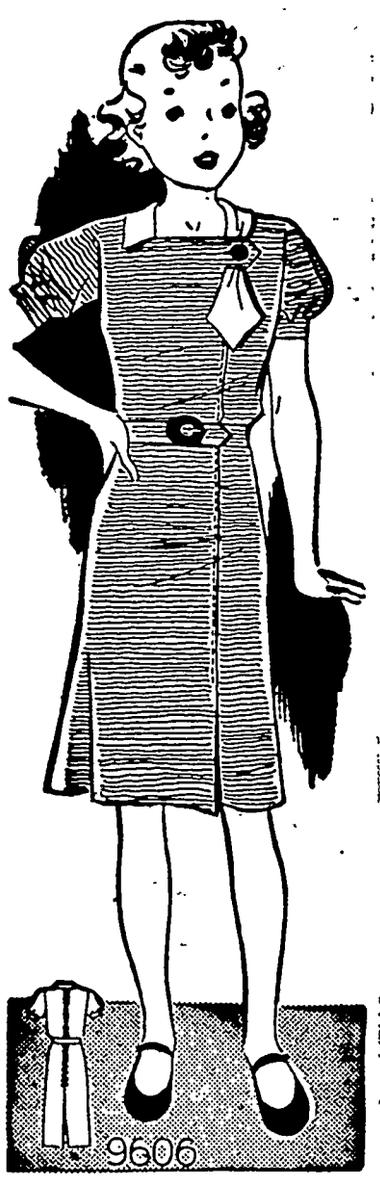
LET JUNIOR MAKE OWN SIMPLE FROCK

PATTERN 9606



Lives there a Junior Miss who couldn't "fall" for this smart yet simple school frock? We just know she will want to make her first fall frock from this pattern, because it's so very easy to cut, assemble and stitch, and if Mother is too busy to supervise the operation, take the pattern and some pretty cotton to sewing class and work on it there. The youthful, square neck adopts a scarf-like collar to slip under its tab, the puffed sleeves have a hearty slash. Action pleats grace back bodice and skirt, a box pleat, the side front skirt.

Pattern 9606 may be ordered only in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14. Size 12 requires 2⅝ yards 36 inch fabric and ⅜ yard contrasting. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Corn-Hog Program Is Indorsed by Farmers

NEW DEALERS have scored a major victory, and are correspondingly elated. By a majority of something like 6 to 1, the corn-hog producers have voted for a continuance of the crop adjustment through another year. Incomplete returns from the referendum showed that the program was favored by a majority in every one of the 33 states from which votes were received.

Chester C. Davis

"It is only natural that we should be pleased with the apparent approval of adjustment given by corn and hog farmers," said Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, as he watched the returns come in at Washington. "If the final results bear out present indications another voluntary contract will be offered for both corn and hogs."

In a formal statement Davis emphasized earlier assurances that the AAA would seek a 25 to 30 per cent increase in hog production next year, saying the "need for increasing the present pork supply of the nation. . . will be kept in mind in plans for the next adjustment contract."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace gave out a statement commending the farmers for their decision. "The referendum means," said Mr. Wallace, "that corn-hog farmers of the country will be doing their best to increase hog production next year in such a way as will not bring about excessive overproduction in subsequent years. They realize their triple duty: To the consumer, to the cause of soil conservation; and to the maintenance of a fair income for themselves."

Before the results of the voting were known President Roosevelt announced tentative plans for making the AAA over from an emergency to a permanent agency. Observers in Washington concluded that Mr. Roosevelt intends to make the AAA a major campaign issue next year and to rely for re-election largely on the voters in those western states that have received the largest cash payments in the carrying out of the crop adjustment program—taking it for granted that he will carry the solid South.

Uncle Sam Is Cautious Concerning Sanctions

WHILE the League of Nations was going forward with its plans for the imposition of sanctions against Italy, its officials asked the United States government to comment on this policy, for the attitude of this country is considered vital to the success of the program. Secretary of State Hull replied promptly but with extreme caution, avoiding comment on the action taken by the league powers and inferentially declining to cooperate in the sanctions.

Secretary Hull

The answer, whose tenor was dictated by President Roosevelt, was sent to Minister Hugh Wilson at Berne. It only set forth the moves made by the United States under the neutrality act and restated our government's hope for world peace. In press conferences Mr. Hull stressed the fact that this country will continue to move independently to keep free and untangled as President Roosevelt has promised.

League of Nations officials on reading the reply said it was "encouraging" and all that could be expected. They looked upon it as important moral support of league efforts to end the warfare in Africa.

Prospects for Early Peace Are Faint

BRITISH diplomats were of the opinion that the chances for an early peace in east Africa were mighty small unless Italy could be stopped by the effective imposition of penalties. The Italians seemed to have dropped diplomatic negotiations with the other European powers and started another big drive from the northern front toward Makale and Addis Ababa. The first day's advance carried their central columns nine miles forward and was said to pave the way for a general movement ahead. So far as the uncertain news from the front shows, the Ethiopians were offering little resistance. To date there has been no battles of major importance, and until the Italians have chances to annihilate the Ethiopians in large numbers the latter have a good chance.

General Graziani's southern army, in three columns, was steadily advancing on Harrar, despite rains and boggy ground and the guerilla warfare waged by the natives. The capture of the important town of Gorahai was imminent.

In Rome Mussolini told a gathering of Fascists that Italy would respond with "heroisms" to the sanctions which he termed "the most odious of injustices."

Hoare Tells British Stand on War

SIR SAMUEL HOARE, British foreign secretary, assured parliament and the world that Great Britain has no intention of fighting Italy and would not alone apply military sanctions against that nation. He held out strong hopes that the war in Africa could be settled without resort by the league to extreme measures. His speech was plainly an invitation to Italy to talk peace terms.

Sir Samuel Hoare

Denying that the government's policy is hostile to Fascism, Sir Samuel said:

"We have not the least intention of interfering in the domestic affairs of other people."

"The unbroken solidarity of the empire is behind the government's policy," he said. "Let those prophets of misfortune who have marked the empire down for decay and dissolution observe this fact of overwhelming importance."

Hoare hinted at British isolation from continental affairs if the league collapses.

Next day Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin warmly endorsed all that had been done at Geneva. He deprecated even the use of the word war, but called for a rearming of the empire, saying: "In the interests of world peace it is essential our defensive services should be stronger than they are today."

Baldwin announced the adjournment of parliament on October 25 and the election of a new parliament on November 14. The campaign already is under way and is lively, with the international situation furnishing the main issues. The Labor party accuses the government of delaying action in the Italo-Ethiopian embroglio until too late to prove really effective, and impugns its motive in seeking rearmament.

Navy Day Is Celebrated by the Nation

NAVY day, which appropriately is the birthday of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, was celebrated throughout the United States. President Franklin D. Roosevelt gave it a good start with a letter to Secretary Swanson in which he declared himself in favor of building the navy up to the country's needs. He said:

"In the unsettled conditions existing throughout the world it is imperative that we should heed the needs of national defense. By the passage of the Vinson-Trammell bill, which authorizes the upbuilding of the navy to the limits of existing treaties, our national legislature gave very definite expression of its purpose to increase the strength of the American navy to a degree commensurate with America's needs, interests and responsibilities."

Six thousand Boy Scouts, headed by Daniel Beard, the aged national scout commissioner, made the customary pilgrimage to the tomb of Theodore Roosevelt at Oyster Bay.

Prince Von Starhemberg May Be Made King

FASCISTS of Austria and leaders of the Helmwehr, all adherents of Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, now vice chancellor of the country, are contemplating the possibility of making the prince regent and later proclaiming him king. Actually the movement toward this end has been started. Von Starhemberg's attitude toward this movement was not revealed, but he indicated in a carefully worded address that he proposed to develop his Fascist ideas with greater vigor.

Prince von Starhemberg

Friends of the prince hold that a Starhemberg dynasty in Austria would be greatly preferable to restoration of the Hapsburgs. They say the pretender to the throne, Archduke Otto, wants to establish a democratic kingdom, and this would not fit in with the ideas of the Fascists. Besides, the return of the Hapsburg dynasty would be bitterly opposed by the little entente and probably by some of the great powers.

Hundreds of Haitians Perish in Hurricane

BELATED reports told of the terrific hurricane that swept across the southern peninsula of Haiti and that was followed by devastating floods. There was no way of estimating the number of fatalities, but they were believed to be as many as two thousand. Entire populations of many valley villages were wiped out. Jeremie, near the western tip of the peninsula, suffered the most. Jacmiel also was hard hit and about one hundred bodies were recovered there. The hydro-electric plant at this place was destroyed.

Kansas Republicans Want Landon for President

THERE is no lack of potential candidates for the Republican Presidential nomination. The latest boom to be informally launched is for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, often mentioned as a possibility. The other day there was a gathering in Topeka of party leaders, including members of the state committee, state office holders, congressmen and Senator Arthur Capper, and after some oratory they unanimously and enthusiastically indorsed the governor for the nomination. Landon had not indicated whether he would be a candidate. If he will, the movement will probably be given formal status at the annual Kansas day dinner in Topeka on January 29, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the state's admission to the Union.

Gov. Landon

"Inquiries about the formation of Landon-for-President clubs have been received from 45 states," said Will G. West, clerk of the United States District court and former secretary to the governor. "Requests for information about the governor are coming from all parts of the country. An organization should be set up soon to supply them with the information and direct activities in formation of clubs."

President Roosevelt Back in the White House

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, deeply tanned and in fine spirits, returned to the White House, his holiday tour ended. When he landed from the cruiser Houston at Charleston, S. C., he told a big crowd gathered to welcome him that the country is on its way back to prosperity under the planned economy of his administration, "and don't let anybody tell you differently."

At an informal press conference just before he left the cruiser, the President was asked to comment on the "impending collapse" of his drive to put three and a half million employables on relief to work by November 1. He replied that November 30 was 39 days off and that November 1 had never been set as the deadline, and that he had been very careful to say that substantially three and a half million persons would be put to work. If three million are at work by November 30 he said he would be satisfied with the four-billion-dollar program, and that it could not then be considered to have fallen down.

Abe Shushan Acquitted of Tax Evasion

ONE of the government's much publicized efforts to punish alleged income tax evaders of Louisiana failed when a jury in Federal court at New Orleans brought in a verdict of not guilty in the case of Abraham L. Shushan, one of the close associates of the late Senator Long. The prosecution claimed he owed $71,000 in taxes. The verdict was greeted with loud cheers by the crowd in the courtroom, and in the ensuing confusion several news photographers were beaten up by former members of Long's bodyguard—which seems to be a habit in Louisiana.

Townsend Plan People Hold a Convention

NEARLY 5,000 men and women from all parts of the United States gathered in Chicago and held a national convention of the Townsend plan, which, as most people know, would give every person sixty years of age a $200 per month income if the person agreed to spend it all within the month, did not work or have an income all told of more than $2,400 a year.

The elderly California doctor who devised the plan was present, and the delegates seriously undertook the work of formulating a campaign to compel the adoption of the plan at the coming session of congress. They reported that Townsend plan units are growing rapidly in all the states.

Mackenzie King Becomes Premier of Canada

FOR the third time in his career Mackenzie King is now prime minister of Canada, following the victory of the Liberal party at the polls. Richard B. Bennett and his Conservative cabinet resigned and King was called on to form the new government, which he did at once. He himself was sworn in as prime minister, president of the privy council and secretary of state for external affairs. Thomase A. Crerar of Winnipeg was made minister of mines, immigration and colonization, interior and Indian affairs. Charles A. Dunning of Montreal is the new minister of finance and W. D. Euler of Kitchener has the trade and commerce portfolio. All the cabinet positions except that of agriculture were filled at once.

New Haven Railway Asks for Reorganization

FIRST of the big eastern railroads to seek reorganization under the amended bankruptcy act is the New York, New Haven and Hartford, which serves one of the most densely populated sections of the country. Its petition was filed because it was unable to meet taxes of $4,000,000 and interest of $2,200,000.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—In days not so far in the distant past, an argument could be developed in any community where there were more than a handful of Democrats if one took the position that the rights of the federal government were predominant over states' rights. States' rights constituted an issue that never died politically until the New Deal arrived on the scene at Washington. Through some two years or more now, we had heard very little about states' rights. Yet, within the last few days, we have found that the states' rights issue was not dead. It was only sleeping, and it has come to life in a really big way.

States' Rights

New Deal policies have been consistently policies of centralization of power in the hands of the federal government. New Dealers have enacted much legislation and have carried out many programs that appear to be contrary to the views which used to be held by advocates of states' rights. These things have been accomplished with almost no complaint from the Democratic side and with only a minimum of squawking from New Deal opposition from whence came complaints about regimentation and extension of government functions into the field of private enterprise in competition with the government's citizens.

Lately, however, some thirty or thirty-five cities have awakened with a shock and have rendered one New Deal program a severe jolt by that awakening. I refer to the plans for government construction of the so-called low cost housing projects. These were and are intended to provide apartments or small homes for families in the very low income brackets and to provide work for labor in their construction. Eventually, it was hoped, the program would use up a good many hundred million dollars of work-relief funds. Some has already been spent; some projects have been completed, and these results coincided with the arrival of tax paying time in certain localities. That was the crux.

To show what has happened in those cities and areas wherein the low cost housing projects have been planned or completed, let us take a particular case, namely, the housing project in Atlanta, Georgia. It is of no use to cite the facts in all of them, because the Atlanta case is typical.

Atlanta Project

Secretary Ickes and his Public Works administration had spent approximately three million dollars in the construction of the Atlanta housing layout. No sooner had this been accomplished, however, than the city of Atlanta awakened to the fact that it would get no taxes nor will the state of Georgia get taxes from this great investment. The project was ruled by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl to be federally owned. As such, it was not subject to state or municipal taxation. The city of Atlanta and the state of Georgia had been deriving taxes from the real estate now owned by Uncle Sam.

It was Atlanta's turn to move. It announced through its properly constituted city authorities that if there were no taxes, then Atlanta could not furnish fire and police protection for the property nor could it supply water for the tenants nor would it permit children of those tenants to attend the Atlanta schools as free students. Atlanta contended that it bears the burden of these expenses and it was not going to add to that burden without reimbursement.

Secretary Ickes sought then to offset the Atlanta ultimatum by tendering funds, taxpayer's money, to the city of Atlanta equal to the amount he thought the city would receive in taxes. Again, Mr. McCarl stepped in. He said that since the property was owned by the federal government it was not subject to taxes and therefore a payment to the city of Atlanta out of federal funds constituted a gratuity. In other words, it was an illegal proposition.

The comptroller general's ruling was so definite and positive that those who have been boosting and boasting about low cost housing projects have been stunned. Frankly, they do not know which way to turn. Thus far, they have not discovered a ray of light to lead them. The housing projects are held in abeyance.

The housing project situation brings to the fore a condition which apparently had not been generally recognized. It relates, of course, to the general subject of taxation but it has a bearing upon many policies now operative and which, it is fair to say, have been described by President Roosevelt as experimental. Since they are experimental, it seems to me they ought to be examined from this taxation phase.

Enter Taxation

One can understand readily the base of the objection. There is hardly a city or town or even any other kind of taxing district in the United States where the tax rates are not at the very peak which the people can carry. That was shown most vividly a year ago when Congress thought it ... sary to enact legislation per... municipalities the privilege of ... ing themselves virtually ban... and according them the right of... promising with their bondholde... der a decree of a United States... The Bonus at Last?
A Little on Account
Teagle Will Sell Oil
The Oceans Are Closer

Washington reports "payment of the $3,000,000,000 soldiers' bonus before the end of the next session is virtually assured." Good news for soldiers.

Arthur Brisbane

Do you suppose the government will print more of its "inflation bonds," and insist on paying interest on its own money, instead of printing new money for the bonus, or do you believe there must be some limits to stupidity?

The League of Nations wants us to "clarify our position." It would be made clear if the President would write to the League of Nations: "Our position is this: "We are attending to our business, and advise you to do the same. Also, what about a little cash on account of $10,000,000,000 you owe us on the last war?"

Walter Teagle, head of the Standard Oil of New Jersey, disposes sensibly of the suggestion that all Americans should refuse to sell oil to Italy. He says Standard Oil is not in the League of Nations and he will continue selling oil through his Italian subsidiary.

This is news, important especially to California, where real estate prosperity grows with improved transcontinental trips.

The Santa Fe railroad, with a diesel engine, hauling nine steel cars and using 3,600 horsepower, has cut 15 hours from the running time between Los Angeles and Chicago.

Queer things happen in Ethiopia. The Daily Express says former War Minister Fitowrary Berru, in disgrace with the emperor because he spent too much money, walked, as a penitent, into the presence of the emperor, carrying on his back a heavy grindstone, and kneeled down in sign of submission. The emperor rolled the stone off his back, meaning forgiveness, and Fitowrary Berru is off spending money again. Some of our baked potato and "little pig" ministers might try that.

Here is war news:

England's soft-voiced Foreign Secretary Hoare begs, implores, beseeches Italy to make peace with Ethiopia while there is still time. "Sanctions" have not yet been applied. England and other countries are selling goods to Italy. "While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return."

You may see a new kind of "Olympic game" with long-distance runners wearing gas masks. In future wars soldiers will wear masks and civilians will wear them. Ability to run in gas masks will be important.

Russia knows that, and "training for the next war" eight men and women of the Osoaviakhim (society for aviation and chemical defense) marched 31 miles in gas masks in 10 hours 47 minutes, a world record.

General Smuts, minister of justice in England's Union of South Africa, says: "Annexation of Ethiopia or its domination by a great European power will mean training one of the biggest, most dangerous black armies the world has ever seen."

General Smuts worries about the conquering power of such a gigantic "black army" unnecessarily.

One pale chemist inventing a better poison gas, or more destructive explosives, and a few first-class pilots could take care of any "black army" that Ethiopia might send forth.

The American Federation of Labor asks American athletes not to attend the 1936 Olympic games, if they are held in Germany. As a reason for "banning German Olympics," the federation says Hitler is crushing labor unions "with blood and fire."

There is a better reason for not holding the 1936 Olympics in Germany.

The chief value of sport is in the fact that manly exercise is supposed, primarily, to develop and inspire courage.

The spectacle of 60,000,000 Germans cruelly persecuting and suppressing 600,000 German Jews is not exactly a picture of courage.

President Roosevelt has said that he intends to keep out of European complications. He will not let Europe complicate our foreign business, making it impossible for American concerns to operate merely to oblige European competitors. In any case our European friends should at least start paying the ten thousand million dollars they borrowed before asking the United States to lose more money for their sweet sake.

Dr. C. H. Mayo predicts that drugs will cure insanity. With the drug now used experimentally, Doctor Mayo hopes to effect permanent cures, by changing the blood circulation in the brain.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

IT BEGINS to look as though Joan Blondell feels that she has had enough of the movies for a while, at least. It's reported that she is planning to turn her back on Hollywood the last of the year and hie herself to New York with her baby, there to take an apartment with her sister Gloria and look over the theatrical field.

An engagement in a successful stage play is an excellent tonic for the career of a motion picture actress, of course. Hollywood is always newly excited about her after she's shown what she can do on the stage. Sometimes the venture works out the wrong way; either the actress can't get a stage job, or she gets one in a play that flops after a run of a few nights, or she finds the stage so different from the screen that her technique won't stand up, and she gets the gentle razzberry from the critics because she's given a bad performance. It's not hard to see why Miss Blondell might want a change of scene, of course. They do say that she is still in love with her husband, whom she recently divorced.

Charles Bickford, after being clawed by a lion during the making of "East of Java," wants to go right back and do the scene over, when he recovers, and with the same lion—seems he feels that it was all a mistake and the lion didn't mean any harm.

Do You Remember Department—Anna Q. Nilsson has gone back to Sweden to live; couldn't make a screen come-back or make a go of acting as actors' agent in Hollywood. Blanch Sweet, who is doing very well on the stage, married Raymond Hackett the other day; he's an actor. Bryant Washburn is returning to the screen in a picture in which his son appears.

The Joan Crawford-Franchot Tone nuptials certainly got them plenty of publicity. The report that they were secretly married last January was denied, of course—but it started rumors that she wanted to use her marriage as publicity for her picture, "I Live My Life," which opened in New York shortly after she and Mr. Tone arrived there. She had taken out insurance in his name, he had given up his house, and hers had been extensively remodeled just before they left for New York. All of which was added up, with two and two making five or six. Meanwhile they rushed about to night clubs and theatrical openings and, like most screen stars in New York, had a beautiful time just being themselves. And Joan is certainly popular when she lets down and is herself.

J. Crawford.

Now they say that Robert Montgomery will play "Romeo" to Norma Shearer's "Juliet"; wish they'd decide on somebody soon. Also it's reported that Miss Shearer's husband, Irving Thalberg, one of the boy wonders of the movies, was coaxed to remain with the company by an offer of lots more money.

Apparently Garbo likes costume pictures, although when she appears in modern ones, her clothes set new styles. She'll do a picture based on the story of Madame Valeska, a heroine of the Napoleonic era.

Though you don't see a great deal about her in the newspapers, Margaret Speaks is one of the stand-bys of radio. Her voice is very beautiful, her selection of songs excellent, and the program on which she appears is looked forward to by people who don't bother to turn the radio on unless something really good can be heard. Even though her program precedes Grace Moore's by so short an interval, she loses nothing by comparison.

Nature's Ice Box O. K.; Keeps Food 33 Years

Nature's ice box has even the best of mechanical refrigerators skinned when it comes to food preservation. Keeping food in good condition for years is no trick at all for natural cold storage plants such as the Antarctic wastes. According to Dr. Dana Coman, physician and dietician for the Lincoln Ellsworth-Sir Hubert Wilkins expedition, food left in a shack in the South Polar region 33 years ago was found to be still edible when discovered. The long-preserved food supplies were left by a Norwegian explorer, Otto Nordenskjold, in 1902.—Washington Post.

SOME INDIANS CANNIBALS

Proof that cannibalism was practiced among American Indians is claimed by Lloyd A. Wilford, anthropologist of the University of Minnesota. An Indian burial mound at Laurel produced skeletons with arm, leg and skull bones crushed to permit drainage of bone marrow, which was used, he believes, either for food or tanning purposes.

ROOSEVELT PROCLAIMS NOV. 11 AS ARMISTICE DAY

Washington.—Proclaiming Nov. 11 as Armistice day, President Roosevelt remarked that "it is particularly fitting on this anniversary of the armistice that we should express our determination to remain at peace with all nations and our conviction that permanent peace can and must be attained thoughout the world."

The president directed that the flag be displayed on all government building that day, and invited the people "to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies in schools, churches, or other suitable places."

Ray Murphy, national commander of the American Legion, said after a call upon the president last week that Mr. Roosevelt would make a talk at armistice day exercises in Arlington national cemetery.

The occasion undoubtedly will bring some observations from Mr. Roosevelt on the involved international situation.

Opportunity....

Why is one man apparently more successful than another?

Is it luck? Not necessarily. More often it is because the one man has a monthly savings program, creating a bank account, which placed him in a position to take advantage of an opportunity at just the right time.

Opportunity comes to all, but only those who are prepared can take advantage of it.

TWO-YEAR CORN HOG PACT INCREASES SWINE PRODUCTION

The two-year adjustment program for corn and hog producers, announced recently by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, will provide for a decided icrease in hog numbers above the present low level brought about by the drouth, County Agent S. J. Oberhauser, has been notified by the AAA.

Proposed hog adjustments are calculated to provide for a 30 per cent increase in federally inspected slaughter in 1936-37 above the slaughter expected in the present year which began October 1, 1935. It is proposed that contract signers be permitted to produce a maximum of 100 percent of their production in the base years, 1932-35

The limiting factor in relieving the pork shortage during the past year, corn hog officials say, has been the time it takes to increase breeding stock and bring the offspring to market weights after the severe drouth enforced liquidation such as took place in 1934.

The new corn-hog contract will require that an area at least equal to the number of acres withdrawn from production of corn be added to the usual area of the farm devoted to soil-improving and erosion preventing uses. This requirement was a part of the 1934 corn-hog contract but was relaxed when the drouth became severe. It was not included in 1935 because of the necessity of providing for an increase in the production of early feed grains and forage crops in order to rebuild drouth-depleted reserves.

Several of the husbands enjoyed a six-thirty o'clock dinner at the Trumbell home.

Ed Jacobs Injured Near Belle Plaine

Suffers Broken Ribs When Car Is Demolished In Turn-Over

Ed Jacobs, Klemme hardware dealer, was severely injured near Belle Plaine early last Wednesday evening when he failed to make a turn and his car left the road and turned over an eight foot embankment.

Ed suffered two broken ribs, a scalp wound and minor cuts and bruises as a result of the smash-up. The car, a new Ford V-8 was almost complete wreck.

Just how the accident happened is still more or less of a mystery to Ed, and as we gather the story from him it happened about this way: Ed was near Belle Plaine when he either failed to see a sharp turn in the road or his brakes failed him. At any rate Ed says all he remembers is that he saw the front wheels of the car up in the air, and the next thing he knew he was trying to get out of the car, which he succeeded in doing just as a farmer and his wife from nearby walked to the scene of the crash to assist him. He accompanied them to their home a few rods distant where he was given first aid and a doctor was summoned to treat him. He later went to the hospital where he remained until Thursday when he was brought home.

Ed says that evidently the car turned end over end and then rolled sideways, as all sides of the car were badly battered up The car was lying on its top when he crawled out. Ed has been at home since the accident and is making a good recovery from his injuries.

Basket Ball Season Starts This Friday

SHAMROCKS OPEN SEASON AT CORWITH FRIDAY EVENING

The Klemme High School Shamrock basketball teams will open the winter season with a double header game at Corwith this week Friday evening.

Klemme fans should accompany the team and see what promises to be a good game. The Shamrocks have a rangy team this year with four regulars well over he six foot heighth. The Corwith school boasts a strong team again t is year. The reserves on both teams will play a fine game as a curtain raiser for the main event. Last year the Corwith and Klemme reserves tied for the Seven Eagles Reserve championship.

Alumni Game, November 26

The annual game between the Town Team and the High School will be played Tuesday evening, November 26th. The Vagabond regulars play the high school varsity while the reserves of both teams will also play. An effort is being made to organize a group of Alumni girls to play with the high school girls team

High School Students Resume Publication Of KHS "Squealer"

(Staff appointed each week by Editor Lyndon Kilgoro and Miss Galbreth.)

EDITORIAL

The High School Squealer got its start last year, and we hope to continue it this year. We feel that the paper was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone, and we would like to have it enjoyed again. Although we are starting a bit late we hope to make up for that by putting out a good weekly that will interest every one. In our opinion the paper is an excellent thing or the school, and we wish to thank Mr. Jorgenson or giving us this chance, which we otherwise would not have, to show what we are doing in our classso and our various activities. We feel that you can see each week what goes on in the school it will arouse more school spirit, and make ours a bigger and better school. So lets read the Squealer and keep track of what is going on.

OUR MAN TINY

Basketball has taken complete ruling in our world of sports. It has tucked away old man baseball in his bed until spring when he shall rule again. Twenty-one players have reported for practice. Nine of them are lettermen. Last year we lost George Stokesbary, pilot of the team.

The Klemme Shamrocks scrimmaged with the town team Wednesday night and showed great improvement in their shooting, passing and quick thinking.

The basketball boys are out selling season tickets and would appreciate it if everyone would buy one. Lets make this a big year. Be out at the games and boost the team. They need our support. The first home game will be November 22, with Ventura. Lets all be there.

—Franklin Kluckhohn

GARNER RESIDENTS RECALL BILLY SUNDAY'S VISIT

GARNER:—A number of older residents recall the services conducted by the Rev. Billy Sunday, who began his evangelistic career here in the winter of 1896. Through the united effort of the members of the three churches, he was brought here to conduct a two weeks revival.

There had been a big revival the two preceding winters conducted by the Rev. Fred Smith and the Rev. Mr. Thompston, but more converts were gained by Billy Sunday. There were no movies, no clubs and few of the present social activities, and old and young turned out at every meeting.

The 700 inhabitants of Garner were all "stirred up." They pleaded for him to extend his campaign through the winter. The late William Schneider was one of the men who insisted on him staying for an extended revival. Billy said he had no more sermons prepared. The few remaining residents who heard him in Garner said the effects of his campaign were lasting. For many years Garner was known as the "town of churches" in Hancock county.

Molds and Frost Injuries Have Weakened Germination Quality

More than 60 percent of the 1935 corn crop in the state probably contains mold, recent field observations and laboratory tests indicate. Prevalence of the dry rots together with frost injuries, both of which have damaged the viability of the crop, make it unwise to save such corn for seed, says R. H. Porter, chief of the seed laboratory at Iowa State College.

Hundreds of ears of corn harvested the last week in October appeared normal on the outside, but when they were broken, mold was discovered. In some cases the germs of the kernels were completely rotted—in other cases only partially rotted. In advanced stages of mold the kernels are practically always dead. Samples selected early and dried by artificial heat show a germination of 85 to 95 percent. Samples with visible signs of disease run as low as 50 percent viability.

Hybrids Affected, Too

Joe L. Robinson, crops specialist working with corn hybrids in the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Association, states that hybrids are affected with dry rot equally as much as open pollinated varieties. Hybrid corn that does not meet the 90 percent germination requirement cannot be accepted as certified seed. Farmers are warned against buying hybrid seed that is not certified, as uncertified hybrids may be unprofitable not only because of their uncertain yield, but also because they are not guaranteed to germinate at least 90 percent.

The 1935 growing season was shortened by a cold, backward spring and an early killing frost. At the time of the first killing frost the moisture content of the corn in the field was high. Following the September frost, the state received considerable rainfall, accompanied by a warm period in October. It is probable that the dry rots made their greatest progress during this warm period when the humidity of the air and the moisture content of the corn were high.

Samples Should Be Taken

All farmers, whether they have selected seed corn or not, should investigate their crop immediately for germination quality. A sample of 8 to 10 kernels from each seed ear should be either left with the county agent or sent direct to the seed laboratory at Iowa State College for testing.

Porten recommends that all seed corn be treated with mercury dust before planting next spring. Experiments show that an increase averaging 4 bushels per acre may be expected from treated seed, and the diseased condition of the 1935 crop makes it unusually desirable to treat corn next spring.

MRS. GOLL, 883, GARNER WAS HONORED ON BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Christena Goll ,of Garner, who was 83 Sunday, was honored when her children, their husbands and wives, grandchildren and great grandchildren numbering 106 gathered at her home to observe the occasion. She has 21 great grandchildren. Only five of her close relatives were absent. Mrs. Goll with her husband, who died 13 years ago came from Germany, settling in Liberty township in 1881, She has lived in Garner 18 years. The party gathered at her home, following church services at the Zion Reformed church, bringing with them the birthday dinner. Her health is good and during the growing season she spends much time in her flower gardens.

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

©W.N.U. By Editha L. Watson

PILLARS OF GOLD

WHEN the Spanish conquerors were following the northward windings of the Rio Grande, they went as far as the northern part of what is now New Mexico. Here, Spanish legend relates, some of the padres, with soldiers at their command, turned to the westward. In the midst of some extremely rough mountains they came across a small valley, and here they saw two great pillars made of large stones.

What these pillars were they did not know, but with the curiosity to which we owe so much of our information about the early southwest, the padres halted to examine these monuments. To their surprise and delight, they found that some of the stones were pieces of rich gold ore, which argued that their source must be somewhere in the vicinity.

So it proved; the lode was rich beyond all dreams, and the party immediately set to work, the soldiers laying down their arms to become miners. They remained in the hidden valley long enough to take out all the gold they could carry with them.

After this time, others who passed that way hunting wealth saw the lonely pillars in the center of the valley, but for a long time no one thought to examine them, and consequently passed on without knowing that their opportunity lay near by, and that a few hours searching might disclose that mine that the padres saw.

At last an old miner by the name of Mike O'Leary, rambling about through this region on a prospecting trip, found the ancient workings, and appeared in Parrot City some time later with enough ore to finance an expensive spree for several weeks. After sobering up he disappeared, only to come into Animas City several months later with more ore.

The old prospector of the western mountains was a wily creature. He preferred hunting alone or with one partner, and if he did strike gold he could be "as mum as a clam" about its location, even though he loved to boast about his good fortune. Knowing the hills as he did the streets of his home town, he usually eluded all those who tried to follow him. He knew only too well that the discovery of his mine would mean a lot of unpleasant neighbors, the theft of his ore, and possibly death to himself. The silence of the old prospectors on the subject of their finds is one of the large factors in the losing of mines.

O'Leary was just such a man. He might show up every now and then with enough gold to pay for a celebration, but he always drifted out of sight before anyone could see where he went. Finally he disappeared for good—nothing more was seen of him, and it is supposed that either he went to some distant city to spend his money, or else the mountains claimed him for the final sacrifice.

With O'Leary's passing, however, the secret of his mine did not remain a secret. Once in a while some miner comes to the front with ore which he claims came from that little valley in the mountains, and there are even said to be maps, made by others who came into sight of the two rock pillars. However, as far as anyone knows, the location of the mine has never been filed as a claim.

SECRET OF THE PRAIRIE

COUNCIL of war!

A party of freighters camped under an old lightning-killed cottonwood, talking earnestly. The year was 1850; the place was Kearney county, Kansas, on the Santa Fe trail. There was $70,000 in Spanish gold in that wagon train, being carried from Mexico to Fort Leavenworth. Would it ever reach its destination?

Indians had begun to follow the wagons in New Mexico. They hung on, making no move to attack, but drawing a little closer day by day. Now, as the freighters consulted with each other around the campfire, the Indians lurked out yonder in the darkness, waiting—waiting—

It was decided to bury the gold. Here, where the great dead tree formed a landmark on the trail, was as good a place as any, and there was no time to lose. There was no telling when the Indians might make up their minds to attack.

It was midnight. The full moon shone brightly on the camp and on the cottonwood, and cast a shadow along the ground. Here, where the shadow fell, they buried the Spanish gold.

Next day they moved on. The Indians followed as usual, drawing a little closer. Three days later they attacked, when the train had reached Pawnee Rock. Only one man survived; he reached Fort Leavenworth, told his story, and died.

There was, no chance, just then, to send out after the gold. It was safe; it must wait until the opportunity presented. And so a year passed before a party set out on the Santa Fe trail to recover the hidden coin.

But during that year lightning had struck the old cottonwood again, and this time had destroyed it completely. There was nothing left to show where it stood. Only the tall buffalo grass rippled in the wind—grass which had grown closely over all the countryside.

He celebrated his obtaining his discharge by staging a big party at his home in Omaha, Neb.

Bay of Fundy Power
Religion Aids Mussolini
Cheap Eggs for Soldiers Government Railroads?

Governor Brann of Maine is unwilling to share expenses, and President Roosevelt may drop the Passamaquoddy power project. That would be a national misfortune. While spending billions so freely, it would seem worth while to spend thirty-six little millions to harness the gigantic tide power in the Bay of Fundy.

Development of that project would supply the whole state of Maine with power and industrial prosperity and pay for itself.

To allow the vast power of one of the highest tides on earth to continue going to waste would be as foolish as it would be to cease using the power of Niagara.

In Milan, Cardinal Schuster, celebrating mass for those that died in the Fascist march on Rome, indorses earnestly Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia, praising "the valiant army which, in intrepid obedience to the command of their fatherland at the price of their blood, open the doors of Ethiopia to the Catholic faith and the civilization of Rome."

Also, according to Associated Press, the cardinal praised Fascism as "promising the national morality wished by the Catholic church."

Italian soldiers in Ethiopia, much surprised, can buy as many fresh eggs as they want at ridiculously low prices.

Ethiopians will not eat eggs—their religion forbids them to devour "that which might have life in the future," but they are willing to sell the eggs to the Italian soldiers and let them imperil their immortal souls by "devouring future life" if they choose.

Ethiopian tribesmen have no scruples about eating the chicken, once it is hatched, which shows that religious scruples take interesting forms. What about the "future life" that the hen might have produced?

Railway labor unions plan a Washington lobby, to promote government purchase and operation of railroads. Owners of some railroads would gladly share the expense of that lobby, if they could sell their railroads at a fair price.

Running a railroad in competition with automobiles, motor busses and trucks is like running a legitimate hotel in competition with night clubs and other former speakeasies.

Russia is a successful spy hunter, having convicted on the average one every six hours, according to "Collier's."

If, in Russia, you are convicted of spying, no second conviction is ever necessary or possible.

These 100,000 spies, to earn their money, must keep international suspicion alive, and that helps to keep war alive.

Rejoicing in the fact that "the 13 years of the Fascist regime have not passed in vain, and the world of plutocratic and conservative egotisms is obliged to take note of this," Mussolini denounces League of Nations sanctions aimed at him as "a preposterous crime destined to increase disorder and distress in every country."

Pan-American Air Lines asks air travelers: "Shall we serve cocktails to passengers?"

The answer should be emphatically "no." First, the average cocktail is unfit for any stomach, except perhaps that of a carrion-eating hyena; second, it has been proved more than once that alcohol and flying do not mix well.

The President inspected "fortifications" of the Panama canal, returning from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Unfortunately there are no fortifications on the Panama canal. The canal depends on its locks and they, open to attack from the air, could easily be destroyed. No engineer will deny that.

The way to have a "fortified" canal is to build one at sea level. In these spending days that might be done now, through Nicaragua.

Uncle Sam would have something to show for his money more substantial than groups of weary gentlemen "raking leaves."

There is encouragement in the fact that "regular jobs," not the artificial made-to-order kind, are increasing. Three hundred and fifty thousand men were hired in September, and payrolls for September are $12,000,000 a week above August.

Warner Brothers' successful production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," under the direction of Max Reinhardt, proves courage and sound judgment.

The picture is a financial as well as an artistic success, greater by far than any recent Shakespearean stage production with living actors.

Mr. Burton, of Cosmopolitan Magazine, asks various highbrows and browsers of middling height to answer: "Will world peace ever be possible?"

The answer is "Yes," but paid spies may postpone the happy day.

Among other parasites, the world now supports 100,000 spies—men and women. Forty thousand have been caught and convicted in Europe during the past 15 years.

Evolution, Diet Causing Man to Lose His Teeth

Started With Cavemen; Future Outlook Gloomy

NORFOLK, VA.—A gloomy future for the teeth of mankind—a future in which we shall have to pamper our mouths increasingly—is foreseen by Dr. William Seidel of the United States Marine hospital here. Doctor Seidel bases his forecast on existing knowledge of the causes of various dental ills.

Evolution and diet are causing man to lose his teeth, in Doctor Seidel's opinion. Since evolution is an irreversible process, the human oral cavity appears destined to be forever afflicted with caries, pyorrhea and misplaced teeth, he says.

Long-Time Loss.

Loss of teeth through evolution has been going on for centuries, Doctor Seidel points out. The great length of time is indicated by the fact that we have already completely lost 16 permanent teeth, having now only 32, while the usual number for mammals is 48. Individually one can lose a good many teeth at one seance with an exodontist, but the evolutionary process is slow and it has required many centuries to produce such a change in our dentition.

This evolutionary change dates at least from the age of the caveman, according to Doctor Seidel, and accompanying it there has been a gradual degeneracy of the whole masticatory apparatus. The teeth themselves, he says, are not anatomically degenerate, with the exception of the third molars, which are often rudimentary; and as some persons do not have third molars, the evolution in dental economy may still be in progress.

Decay Commonest Fault.

Dental caries, or decay, is the most universal and common disease of mankind and this condition, as well as that of the malformed mandibles, is due to the fact that the masticatory organs of modern man have become unfitted properly to perform their functions, according to Doctor Seidel. Not only are the gums and teeth themselves insufficient, but the mandible and maxilla, together with their alveolar bone and sockets, are also deficient.

The mere fact of the high incidence of caries proves the inadaptability of the teeth to modern diet—an inadaptability that is hygienic in character rather than mechanical or physiological. Modern foods do not keep the teeth clean; and nature surely intended that they should be kept clean through natural processes rather than by modern artificial means.

Martin Announces Plan to Build 100,000-Pound Oceanic Air Transport

BALTIMORE.—Detailed plans for a trans-Atlantic Diesel-powered airliner with an over-all weight of 100,000 pounds were announced by Glenn L. Martin, airplane manufacturer, here.

The proposed air giant would make the crossing of 3,600 miles non-stop from New York to London in but little more than a day. One way passage, at the start, might be as low as $415 and drop to $265 when nine or more trips were made a week.

"In justice to the flying boat I wish to correct the impression that the long range flying boat is not ready to carry tonnage in over-ocean transport service," declares Mr. Martin.

Pointing out that over-ocean transport flying boats are already carrying as much as 28,000 pounds of useful load, Mr. Martin continues: "No addition to present knowledge or technique is needed to build an ocean transport airplane to carry a useful load of 52,000 pounds."

Rural TB Rises From Work, School Contacts

MILWAUKEE, WIS. — In rural areas more new cases of tuberculosis develop from contacts with tuberculous persons in schools, factories or other work places than from contacts within the home and family, it appears from a report by Jean Downes to the American Public Health association.

Miss Downes, working under the Milbank Memorial fund, investigated the spread of tuberculosis in Cattaraugus county, New York. She found that in this region for every case resulting from a family contact there were two in the community as a result of contact outside the family.

"Tuberculosis in that rural area has been acquired chiefly through contact in the small centers of life, the family, the factories and other work centers, and the schools," Miss Downes reported.

Crystal Gazing Tests Hearing of Day-Dreamers

Experiment on Normal People, Mental Cases

A DARKENED room. . . . An insane patient gazing into a sky-blue illuminated crystal. . . . Earphones strapped to the patient's head. . . . Stillness broken only by the monotonous hum of an electric fan. . . . A scientist sitting in a distant booth silently operating a noiseless electric switch.

The scene was not that of a spirit seance. What was going on was a test of the effect day-dreaming has on the sense of hearing. The suggestion had been made that persons with certain mental diseases can be picked out from normal persons by the way they respond to this unusual situation.

Normal persons as well as mental patients were tested. First each individual was given a test of suggestibility and various other measures designed to reveal his type of personality. Then he was given a hearing test under ordinary conditions, sounds of varying loudness being conveyed to him through the earphone. He was instructed to press a signal key like a telegraph each time he heard a sound.

Told to Day-Dream.

Next he was allowed to gaze into the crystal and was told to relax completely, day-dream and build air-castles—to let his mind wander wherever it would. He was not to listen particularly for the tones, but to think that if they came, his finger would press the key.

What happens to your hearing under these conditions? Well, about one-third of those tested showed no change at all. Another third pressed the key after fainter sounds than they had been able to hear under ordinary conditions. For the remaining third, the sound had to be louder in order to gain a response.

The test was not successful in picking out the mentally abnormal from the normal, except that those with the mental disease, dementia praecox, showed less change than others. This was attributed to the characteristic inability of these patients to adapt to new conditions—perseveration, the psychiatrist calls this quality, from the same root as the familiar word perseverance.

Why Normal Persons Differ.

Why do normal persons differ in the way the crystal gazing affects their hearing? The explanation made by the investigating scientist is that some are able to follow the directions; they relax thoroughly, day-dream and get sleepy. They do not hear so well.

Others were not able to do as instructed; they were disturbed by the situation, and instead of relaxing became more tense. They were alert and heard better than usual.

The third group were not affected by the situation at all. Their hearing remained as always.

Russian Braves Desert to Study 200 Extinct Craters of Southwest

TUCSON, ARIZ.—Exploring one of the most extensive volcanic areas in North America, Dr. Nicolai Kerensky, Russian scientist, is now charting more than 200 extinct craters along the Gulf of California. The region is 300 miles southwest of here and lies partly in the United States and partly in Mexico.

"Besides mapping this virtually unknown country, I am going to study these eruptions as an example of the cooling of the earth's crust," he reported here before he left. "I hope also through excavations and the study of the Hiatit Ootam, a vanishing tribe of Root Eaters, to trace the history of man, both past and present, in this sun-seared land."

Because the region is uninhabited except for about twenty of the Hiatit Ootam, who live on the roots of the bistatk, a parasite of the coldenia shrub which will grow in the sand with only two or three inches of water a year, the trip is a dangerous one. Six persons have become lost and died there of thirst during the last five years. The tinajas, the water holes, are far apart and often dry. The heat is also excessive, the temperature averaging 110 degrees Fahrenheit.

Women of Medieval Asia Were Buried With Horses

MOSCOW.—Graves of Bronze age men—and also women—buried with one, two or even three faithful steeds beside them, have been discovered in the Altai mountains.

An expedition from the Moscow State Museum of History, exploring Seventh to Ninth century graves in these mountains of southern Siberia, uncovered the burials in which horses were so conspicuous.

The skeletons of one warrior was found accompanied by three horses in full harness, a servant, weapons, ornaments of gold and silver, and other possessions. The archeologists listed 224 antique articles from this extraordinary burial alone. One silver jug bears writing in Orkhon script, an ancient Turkish script of the Seventh and Eighth centuries.

GRANITE STATE

Granite Quarry in New Hampshire.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, the Granite state, claims primacy in many things. In 1776 its Colonial assembly adopted the first written constitution to be enjoyed by any of the states. Two years before this, it was on New Hampshire soil that the first armed blow was struck at British domination, when a band of patriots, led by John Sullivan and John Langdon, overpowered the small garrison at Fort William and Mary, in Portsmouth harbor, and took away the stores of powder. These were hidden beneath the pulpit in the old meeting house at Durham and were later taken to Bunker Hill, where another New Hampshire patriot, John Stark, used the ammunition in the engagement which first showed the quality of the New England rebels.

Apropos of Stark at Bunker Hill, there is a story that two British officers were watching the debarkation of their troops and were looking toward the crest of the hill where the Colonists had gathered. "Will they fight?" said one to the other. And his companion, who had served with Stark during the Indian wars, replied, "If one John Stark is there, they'll fight." The annual celebration of Bunker Hill day in Boston is in consequence something of an irritation to the New Hampshire mind, because it recalls that New Hampshire furnished most of the men, and that it was the strategy of John Stark of that state which gave the Colonials their success.

It is somewhat surprising to note that this same John Sullivan who led the midnight marauders at Fort William and Mary should have proved so cautious as a member of the Continental congress which formulated the Declaration of Independence. But when the die was cast, none was more courageous than he, and his march against the six nations is celebrated, even to this day.

Had First Free Library.

Among the other firsts, and one which gives New Hampshire much satisfaction, is the fact that at Peterboro was established the first free public library supported wholly by public taxation. This library is now housed in a handsome building, the gift of a successful son of the town; and in many another community may be seen similar proofs of affection for the old state and the home town.

For two centuries New Hampshire was a nursery of seamen, and from Colonial times its seaboard resounded to the stroke of the calker's mallet. From Portsmouth set forth the expedition to Louisburg with New Hampshire men carried in New Hampshire bottoms, and it was at Portsmouth, too, that John Paul Jones fitted out the Ranger and sailed with her, flying the Stars and Stripes to which the first official salute was paid by a foreign nation.

The navy yard at Portsmouth dates back to the Revolutionary period. The house in which John Paul Jones lived while superintending the building of his Ranger is still standing and is the home of the Portsmouth Historical society. Another of the handsome old properties of those days, the Moffatt-Ladd house, is now the home of the Colonial Dames, who, upon occasion, renew the traditions of the house for gracious hospitality.

During the days of wooden ships, while we were dependent for our defense, as was ancient Athens, upon "wooden walls," the Portsmouth navy yard was a busy place. The Constitution, "Old Ironsides," was rebuilt there; and now, rebuilt again, she has in recent years paid a visit to her foster-mother in New Hampshire. During the World war, Portsmouth again hummed with industry, and the yard has now become the country's principal base for the construction of submarines, one of the two largest of the craft having slid from Portsmouth ways.

Ships for the World War.

During the World war, there sprang up on the banks of the Piscataqua, just above Portsmouth, two shipyards, one for wooden and the other for steel vessels. These craft of Portsmouth origin did their full share in the winning of the war, and the yards are now turned to the uses of peace, one as a dye plant, and the other for the manufacture of gypsum products, the raw material being brought from Nova Scotia.

At Portsmouth, too, was built the Kearsarge, with oaken timbers taken from the slopes of the mountain whose name she bore. She laid her bones upon a Caribbean reef, but New Hampshire does not forget that her record is written—Portsmouth, Che ourg, Roncador.

So important, indeed, was the shipbuilding industry in New Hampshire that the state seal bore, and still bears, the representation of a ship upon the stocks, though its heraldry has recently been revised; and, while the ship still remains upon the state's escutcheon, the barrel of rum which stood so prominently in the forground was erased, in deference, perhaps, to the Eighteenth amendment.

The embargo act laid a heavy hand upon our shipping, but coincident with it came the beginning of that development of our water powers which has created the industrial cities which we continue to be proud.

Thus New Hampshire stands forth today, the little state with the big history. Its population is almost stationary, succeeding censuses giving it little beyond the natural increase. Its taxable inventory, though jacked high by the ingenious devices of modern taxing boards, is probably excelled by several private fortunes in the United States; but still the people of the state manage to have most of the things which modern life insists to be necessary.

New Hampshire's automobile registrations, for instance, are in such number that it is possible to take the entire population of the state for a Sunday afternoon ride. To accommodate them the state has developed a series of trunk highways, three in number, which traverse the state from the Massachusetts border to the Canadian line, piercing the White mountains and following the course of the state's greatest rivers. To these the commonwealth is adding cross-state roads, which will gridiron New Hampshire with modern highways.

Good State Institutions.

New Hampshire's state institutions provide for all the needs of the state's dependent, delinquent, and defectives, and for its enterprising youth the University of New Hampshire presents expanding courses for the training of young men and women, who, unfortunately, in too great numbers, do not remain in the state to enable it to enjoy the fruits of its bounty to them.

Its public schools are now so arranged, so equipped, and so supported through state aid that no child need lack full 36 weeks of schooling each year, with free bus transportation and in some instances with a free lunch thrown in.

Its agriculture in particular is a subject for pride. The farmers are hard-working and thrifty, and many of them upon their stony acres can realize the truth of the old jest, that even sheep in New Hampshire had to be provided with steel muzzles to enable them to graze, and that most of the crops of the state had to be planted with a shotgun. New Hampshire agriculture has specialized of late particularly in the dairying and truck line; but, even at its best, it cannot yield the rich rewards which farmers have secured in other states.

In common with the entire agricultural brotherhood of the country, New Hampshire farmers have suffered from changed conditions and from existing depression. But they are still self-respecting and self-supporting. As a matter of fact, in the volume of per capita federal taxes paid, New Hampshire farmers will be found contributing mightily to the proclaimed necessities of their more querulous brethren in other sections.

But a native points out he supposes that the state's chief product will continue to be men, in token of which, as Webster said, "The Almighty has hung out a sign high up in our hills," where the Old Man of the Mountain, with the storms of ages beating upon his rugged brow, broods ceaselessly over the moving scene which is unfolded before him.

These men New Hampshire has contributed without number to sister commonwealths; and wherever there have been brave deeds to be done, wise public policies to be formulated, generous philanthropy to be administered, mighty doctrines to be declared, or, indeed, any demands upon the skill, genius, learning, or courage of mankind, there the sons of New Hampshire have had, still have, and will continue to have their full share in the advancement of human destiny.

Evidently the reporter who made the interview in the "Thumbnail Biographies" feature of the High School Squealer forgot to mention the fact that the young lad is troubled by a confirmed weakness for a certain red-head.

Many a man has had differences of opinion with his wife, but she never knew it.

Several local citizens staged an impromptu torchlight parade along Main Street Thursday in the wee hours of the night. Must be getting near election time. Anyway I'd like to have the range of voice that tenor thought he had.

When a man gets too old to set a bad example, he begins to give good advice.

Two local laddies are making frequent trips north to the home of the Norwegians inhabiting the frozen wastelands surrounding Forest City and Thompson. The word "music" seems to cover a multitude of sins.

When the brakes of your car don't hold, try to hit something inexpensive.

Pedestrians are prone to be careless, declares a judge. At least many of them are prone.

And the woman who knows how to manage a husband, never had one.

A Klemme "professional" man was mingling rather freely with the paving crew and upon occasion offering advice as to the performance of certain operations. The straw boss noted this, and when the weather forced the crew to stop work he turned to one of his men and spoke a few words. The assistant walked over to where the k. p. m. was standing and growled:

"Hey, you! The boss says you can quit work now but report back Monday."

And was this face crimson?

Do you suppose that the Garner Miss who visited an east side Klemme boy one recent Wednesday evening was just extending an invitation to a candy party? Anyway, that's His story.

What a fine world this would be if the women had as much faith in their husbands as they have in their beauty specialists.

Teacher asked her class if they could compose a rhyme using the word "Nellie." Johnny Jones, being called upon arose much embarrased.

"There was a pretty little girl named Nellie,
Who fell in the water and wet her little feet."

"Why, Johnnie," said Teacher. "That doesn't rhyme."

"I know it doesn't. The water wasn't deep enough."

Ever Notice This

If traffic's choked for many blocks,
If horns do sound and bumper locks
With bumper, just bet your socks

When taxi drivers dodge and sweat,
And big cops weep and people get
All set to jump, then you can bet

When a can leaps as if 'twere shot,
With gears that scream like a lot
Of dying men, then like as not
A woman's at the wheel

A woman's voice and woman's smile
May ease dull care. A woman's guile
May bring us joy, but look out while.
A woman's at the wheel!

Scientists tell us that sound travels at the rate of about 400 yards per second. But there are some exceptions to the rule that we've noticed, namely:

Scandal—1,000 yards a second.
Flattery—10 yards.
Truth—six inches.

Pullman Conductor: "Boy, what's the idea of the red lantern on that berth?"

Overzealous Porter: "Look, boss. Here in rule thirteen it says—always hang a red lantern when the rear of the sleeper is exposed."

Seven ages of women: Safety pins, whip pins, hair pins, fraternity pins, diamond pins, clothes pins, rolling pins.

Green, the oculists say, quiets the nerves. We have noticed it, if it is nice and crisp, and has a 10 marked on it.

Oscar Hassenpfeffer was accused of marrying the girl because her aunt left her a fortune. "But that isn't true," said Oscar. "I would have married her no matter who left her the money."

Put one in the big tank for the cattle and horses. It will save a lot of feed. The same thing is true with the Hog. A hog needs a lot of water to put on fat and do well. Ice cold water is no more inviting to a pig than it is to a human when one is cold. Give the hog a chance to make you some money. Give them warm water to drink.

pleted the second part of the Geometry text book and are having a series of tests over this section.

The World History class had a test Friday instead of the regular assignment of current events. Current events are very interesting to the class and I think everyone enjoys them.

Seniors

In English Literature, the seniors are studying "Macbeth." It has proved to be a very interesting subject.

The seniors have been having a review in geometry since working on "Forces Acting Through a Point" in physics.

After struggling with physics for an hour, we find relief in business arithmetic class where we review the good old eighth grade arithmetic, only by shorter methods. Friday we had a contest and the boys "skunked" the girls, working every problem correctly.

—Dolorys Cook

Juniors

The American history class will soon be studying about the Civil War. We hope it doesn't give us bad ideas so that our class starts a civil war. If so, I hope my side wins. Most of us can name all the presidents in order from Washington to Taylor. I wonder how many more there will be.

The pupils in the public speaking class last week gave nomination speeches. Also we divided off in pairs and gave a demonstration in salesmanship. Now if anyone wants some high pressure salesmen or somebody to buy something let us know, because every lady bought something. Do you suppose it was the salesman's fault?

Last week the juniors read a very interesting account of Herman Melville's adventures with a tribe of cannibals. We all tried to write fiction to make a conclusion to the story, and if I may say so, they weren't half-bad. The name of the story was "Typee."

The typing students feel quite proud of themseles for they have learned all of the ABC's, and all of the numbers signs, and punctuation for typing. All of our typing lately has been for accuracy. When we first began to type it was rather hard, because the keys weren't lettered. Another thing that was hard to do was to keep our eyes on the copy we were copying. We have almost mastered these difficulties. We are all very proud of Klemme High because of giving us the opportunity to learn how to type And just imagine, our typewriters are noiseless.

BASKETBALL

This year we have a real turnout of basketball players and should have an excellent team. Nine of those who are out are lettermen two have had experience and ten are out for the first time, making a total of twenty-one players. Below you will find a game record of last year's players who are back. There is also a record giving the age, height, and grade in school of all the players out this year.

Friday, November 15th, we journey to Corwith for a non-conference game. Corwith has a large, rangy team, much the same as last year's and will be plenty tough, but we believe we can best them. So everybody go to Corwith, yell for us, and help us win. L. E. K.

INQUIRING REPORTER

What feature of the Squealer did you enjoy most last year and why?

Harriet Gibbs—Well, I hardly know because I enjoyed it all very much (except the things I wrote). However, I believe the inquiring reporter interested all of us most. We got other students ideas on the various topics reported on. Here's hoping this feature will continue to be a part of our paper this year.

Dorothy Greiman—The feature of the paper I enjoyed most last year was 'Inquiring Reporter," because, then I could read what others wrote in this part besides myself. It seemed as though I was always picked on when it came to writing something for this part. Now don't you think so?

Arlene Kraus—I enjoyed mostly the question and answer feature of the last year's paper. It gave a very good description of the pupil's opinions of school and other things.

Franklin Kluckhhn—That is difficult to say. I believe each feature last year was as good as another. But I believe I did enjoy the editorials best. Maybe because Bessie wrote them up so good was the reason. I believe the editorial feature has the most sensible writings. A person, in my opinion, gets his best reading on the editorial page.

Paul Schuldt—I should say that I liked "Shamrock Blarney" best. I have chosen this because it is very interesting to me and I think it is interesting to all the people that read it. It tells of the happenings in school and the interesting jokes and pranks which are pulled during the week. I for one hope that the school paper will continue.

THUMBNAIL BIOGRAPHIES

Every week we will publish a short biography of the students whose birthdays come closest to the issue. This week we have three and here they are:

Marva Jean Bredlow was born in Liberty township, November 2, 1921. She was the 1st girl to arrive in the family with two brothers ahead of her. When Marva Jean was six years old she started school at Liberty No. 9. She passed the 8th grade exams as a B class student and is now in Klmeme High for her first year. Some outstanding features of Marva Jean's are: she is the smallest in her class and also one of the smartest.

—Reuben Grosshuesch

Dolonys (Shorty) Cook, was born November 14, 1918 on a farm about two miles south of Klemme. When she was very young, people could tell by her crying that she had a very good pair of lungs (this was the beginning of her beautiful alto voice). Dolor's says the greatest accomplishment of her early life was when she learned to walk. When she was six years old, she started to school and got her preliminary education in Avery No. 5. She says her most outstanding event while going to grade school was once when she sang over WMT. Now she is the smallest senior in KHS. Shorty says that her life's ambition is to be a radio artist. —Milvern Barz

Leo Brinkman was born November 13, 1918. He started to school at the age of five years and is now a senior at the age of 16, going all the way through the Klemme school He has played baseball and is on is fourth year of basketball. He is the oldest of a family of four boys. Hunting is his chief hobby, and baseball his favorite sport.

Easy to Make Pajamas Please Sleeping Beauty

PATTERN 2362

You're sure to want several pairs of these adorable pajamas when you find how easy they are to make. Why not have your week-night ones of some pretty cotton or flannel which launders easily? Then you just must have one pair in a luscious shade of blue or tearose silk, for gay week-ends away from home, and your "nightly" wardrobe isn't complete without one pair of dress-up pajamas of some heavier material for lounging or lazing, particularly if you're a Campus Queen. The tailored shirtwaist top may tuck into the bell-bottom trousers which "get the hang of it" from a triangular yoke and snug elastic waistband.

Pattern 2362 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 4 yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 243 West Seventeenth St., New York City.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON D. C.

Washington.—About this time every fall, the President calls the director of the budget to the White House and they go into a huddle about the finances of the government, about the needs for money of the various governmental agencies who must pay their employees and the other expenses to which they are put and in addition they discuss general questions of policy. It is, as I said, an annual affair that presages a new tempo in the movement of activities in Washington because it occurs some weeks in advance of the reconvening of congress. Congress, under the Constitution, must appropriate the money which is spent by all branches of government.

In Huddle on Budget

Well, the annual huddle has just been held by President Roosevelt and Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the bureau of the budget, and Mr. Bell has gone back to his office in the treasury with instructions to begin formulation of budget estimates for submission to congress.

Of course, budget making goes on throughout the year. The huge staff of experts and accountants who work under Mr. Bell's direction are busy the year 'round examining the proposed requirements of the various agencies and arriving at conclusions as to what their needs reasonably should be. The White House conference, therefore, represents the second step because those were the figures that formed the basis of the discussion between the President and his budget director.

In drafting the budget for submission to the next session of congress, the administration is confronted with a variety of problems, not the least of which is the political phase. It is to be remembered that the budget now under consideration covers money that will be appropriated for use after July 1, 1936, and the succeeding 12 month period. Therefore, half of the Presidential campaign next year, indeed, the heated part of that campaign, will take place after governmental agencies have begun to use the new appropriations. It is easy to see, therefore, that politics can hardly be kept out of the forthcoming budget in some form or other even though every President says politics does not influence budget making. Nevertheless, New Deal spending and future taxation constitute questions which the President cannot overlook and is not overlooking because those things are vital to every man, woman and child in the nation.

Problems to Solve

It seems to be pretty well settled now that the Republicans are going to make spending and taxation their major ammunition against Mr. Roosevelt and his New Deal. In fact, it seems reasonably sure that the Republican slogan will be "Throw the Spendthrifts Out." That being the case, Mr. Roosevelt obviously must have in the back of his head considerable concern over the current budget making.

Knowing "Danny" Bell as I have known him for nearly 20 years, during which time he has grown up in the treasury service, I think it ought to be said in his favor that politics is farthest from his thoughts. He is as nearly a human figuring machine as any man I have known in my Washington career except possibly the man under whom he was trained, namely, the late Robert Hand. His chief concern is and always has been a determination to have accurate statistics, accurate conclusions and recommendations based as nearly as may be upon sound judgment.

But in saying these things about Mr. Bell I am not saying that budgetary plans are not subject to manipulation. It has been true in previous administrations and it is true in this one. The vast totals of figures with their minima of explanations are never easy to understand. This is one way of saying that they can be made to conceal a great deal more than they reveal.

I mentioned the issues of spending and taxation. The American Liberty League which has consistently warned about the possibility of future heavy taxation has not been silent since the President some weeks ago made public a pre-budgetary summation. The League insists that while present tax rates soon will provide enough money to meet what the President terms as "ordinary" expenditures of the government, the rates are insufficient to meet the spending which Mr. Roosevelt calls extraordinary in that it covers relief. Further, the League, in a statement the other day, asserted its belief that the present tax level was high enough to meet "legitimate relief if present unsound spending policies are abandoned." But it is emphasized by the league that even "if unsound spending policies are abandoned," the present tax levels are insufficient to make possible any appreciable retirement of the gigantic debt that has been built up through the New Deal relief program.

Spending, Taxation

So it is easy to see that a head-on collision between two schools of thought is inevitable. Mr. Roosevelt and his brain trusters have contended and will continue to contend that federal spending in the volume that has taken place was the only means by which the nation could be carried over this period of depression. On the other hand there will be the vicious attacks of Republican campaigners, the shots by such men as Lewis Douglas, former director of the bureau of the budget, who broke with Mr. Roosevelt over "reckless spending," and all of those groups of which the Liberty League is typical. These have plenty of campaign material, and you can make sure that they will use it.

My experience as an observer of politics and government prompts me to say that there is nothing that strikes the heart of the average taxpayer quite so fundamentally as displays of waste with the accompaniment of forecasts of greater taxation. Thus, if the New Deal opposition goes ahead on the course that appears to be charted for them—actually it is made to order for them—they can cause the administration many anxious moments. I say this, knowing full well, that the administration has much argument on its side and that it is equipped with the finest layout of machinery for influencing public opinion that any administration ever has had. It has at its command all of the machinery used in crop production control, the thousands of persons on the federal pay roll and the millions who believe Mr. Roosevelt is earnestly seeking to make this a better country in which to live. It is, therefore, no small task for the New Deal opposition if it is to succeed even in turning the New Deal strength in the house of representatives to anything near a even distribution of the seats.

Apparently, New Deal opposition will be concentrated as much in the congressional districts as against the President himself. The reasons are simple. First, the senate is going to remain Democratic whether Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected or defeated. Only one-third of the 96 senators come up for re-election next year and the bulk of these are from normally Democratic states. Unless a cataclysm follows the Democratic party, the senate majority for the Democrats will continue to be ample.

New Deal Opposition

Such is not the case in the house of representatives where the entire membership must seek election every two years. There are in the house membership probably as many as 75 Democrats who can be called pure political accidents. That is, they were elected from districts which are normally Republican during the landslide that swept Mr. Roosevelt into office. A considerable number of these naturally will be retired by the voters just as a considerable number of Republicans were retired after they had held house seats in the early 1920's by virtue of election in the Harding landslide. Consequently, changes may be expected in the house New Deal strength. In concentrating the fight in congressional districts, the New Deal opposition is battling for position. If the New Deal majority in the house can be whittled down, it will then become impossible for the President to drive through his program of legislation as he has done in the last three sessions. From the Republican standpoint, this would be important since it would place Mr. Roosevelt in much the same position that President Hoover found himself in the last half of his administration when he had an adverse congress on his hands. No political leader likes that situation.

When the New Deal opposition jumps onto the questions of spending and taxation, therefore, and when it goes back to the grass roots of congressional districts, it takes no stretch of the imagination to see that a real political fight lies ahead. Developments between now and the nominating conventions next June may change the general perspective.

While several of the federal courts, including the Supreme court of the United States, are considering questions revolving around President Roosevelt's program for development of Muscle Shoals in the Tennessee river as an electrical power project, government owned, a newly discovered letter written by President George Washington takes on unusual interest. It seems that even in 1791, there was argument about the development of Muscle Shoals. The letter, which was addressed to the attorney general of the United States at that time, called attention to the efforts being made by individuals to effect trades with Indians and suggested the necessity for federal laws that would afford some protection for the Indians in their dealings with the white men. It will be remembered, of course, that the Tennessee river valley in those days was populated by Indians, but the problem that existed then exists today, namely, protection of the rights of the individual.

lization of Gibraltar Demanded by Italy

EN the nations get together in ndon in December for the next nference, it is not likely they able to agree on much in the way of limitation of naval armament. But there is a good prospect that Italy will there demand the neutralization of the straits of Gibraltar, which would be extremely distasteful and perhaps embarrassing to Great Britain. Diplomats are certain the British would refuse to make the concession. They say Mussolini's purpose is to force Britain to declare her intentions in the Mediterranean, where a large part of her war fleet is massed at the present time.

It was reported in Paris that the Duce would ask that the straits be put in the same status as the Suez canal, and would offer to scrap two 35,000 ton battleships now under construction as an evidence of his good faith. Britain hopes France will support her attitude concerning this demand and in return may agree to take a larger percentage of exports from French Morocco to strengthen France's position in that colony. French naval experts said that, while neutralization of the straits would guarantee free passage for France for all time, yet "it would be better to have a strong British hold on Gibraltar" in case France got in a war with Germany and was faced with the prospect of German submarines entering the Mediterrannean to ravage her commerce and stop transport of troops from north African possessions.

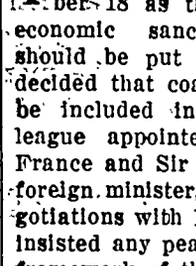
Sanctions Against Italy in Effect November 18

THE League of Nations set November 18 as the day on which the economic sanctions against Italy should be put into effect, and later decided that coal, iron and oil should be included in the embargo. The league appointed Premier Laval of France and Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign minister, to carry on peace negotiations with Italy. Sir Samuel still insisted any peace must be within the framework of the League.

The Italian armies on the northern front pushed further into Ethiopia, following the tanks and with bombing planes active overhead, and one column entered the city of Hauzien on the way to Makale. The invaders met with no resistance of consequence. The government at Addis Ababa announced that Italian planes had killed 30 women, 15 children and 100 cows with bombs and machine gun fire at Gorahei.

Emperor Haile Selassie Celebrates Anniversary

WHILE the invading Italians were pushing further and further into his realm, Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia celebrated the fifth anniversary of his coronation, and he did it in fine style, too. Escorted by a throng of feudal chiefs in barbaric atire, the king of kings and his queen passed through the streets of Addis Ababa amid wildly cheering thousands, and gave thanks to God in St. George's cathedral. Afterward, seated on his ivory and teakwood throne in the palace, he received the felicitations of the chieftains and the diplomatic corps. In the afternoon Haile gave the soldiers a great feast of raw meat, and in the evening he entertained the diplomats and nobles at a state banquet with golden service and rare wines.



Emperor Haile Selassie

The emperor holds that the big oil concession negotiated for American interests by F. M. Rickett, the English promoter, still holds good although the Americans relinquished it at the suggestion of Secretary Hull. "This concession," said Haile, "is an integral part of our national economic program. We purposely granted it to a neutrol country like the United States in order to avoid political complications and international jealousies. It is unfortunate that war must delay its fullfilment. Through the benefits accruing to this concession we hope to raise the social level of people and provide them with honorable remunerative employment.

"I am sure that when our country is again at peace, and the circumstances are propitious, all the terms of the enterprise will be carried out by the original concessionaires, who never canceled the concession, but merely withdrew temporarily at the suggestion of the State department for the worthy motive of promoting international peace."

Milwaukee "Fiend" Killed by His Own Bomb

MILWAUKEE, which had been terrorized for eight days by a succession of mysterious dynamitings, was relieved when the terrorist, Hugh Frank Rutkowski, was blown up by his own bomb as he was preparing for another outrage. Unfortunately a little girl was killed by the same blast. The bomber, described by the chief of police as "an extreme low type of individual with a warped, criminal mind," had at least one accomplice who may also have been blown to pieces by the explosion.

Two-Year Program for Corn-Hog Production

AFTER a conference with agricultural specialists and representatives of farmers, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace announced that a two year program for corn and hog producers had been determined upon, the main features of which are:

1. Prevention of an excessive production of corn in 1936 and 1937.
2. Allowance of an increase in next year's pig crop that would be at least as great as it is estimated would take place were no adjustment program in effect.
3. Prevention of an excessive increase in the 1937 pig crop.

Maximum and minimum hog production requirements will be imposed under the new contract particularly to prevent regional dislocations in production next year, according to AAA officials who said such "dislocations" would be certain to develop because of maladjustments in feed supplies and hog numbers brought about by the 1934 drouth. The maximum and minimum requirements have not been determined.

The new contract will require that an area at least equal to the number of acres withdrawn from production of corn be added to the usual area of the farm devoted to soil-improving and erosion-preventing uses. This requirement was a part of the 1934 corn-hog contract but was relaxed when the drouth come.

Corn Loan of 45 Cents Announced by Wallace

CONTINUING the administrations' policy of "enabling farmers to market their crop in a more orderly fashion," Secretary of Agriculture Wallace announced a corn loan of 45 cents a bushel on the 1935 crop, available from December 1 until next July 1. The Commodity Credit corporation had already approved this and asked a commitment from the RFC to provide the necessary funds.

Wallace estimated that about $150,000,000 would be advanced to corn growers under this program. Borrowers must sign the AAA corn-hog control contracts. The loans will be made on corn which, if shelled, would grade No. 3 or better. The grade requirement last year called for was No. 4. The loan rate then was 55 cents.

Tugwell's Budget Talk Displeases President

REXFORD G. TUGWELL, undersecretary of agriculture and once considered head man of the "brain trust," made a speech at Los Angeles the other day that called forth a sharp rebuke from President Roosevelt. Addressing a Democratic gathering, Tugwell asserted that the administration could satisfy every humanitarian demand and still balance the budget in 1938.

R. G. Tugwell

Mr. Roosevelt, in a press conference scolded the newspapers for printing what he called "crazy stories" and went on to declare that Tugwell's assertion was almost as unfounded as the predictions thrown out by many political observers that the budget probably would never be balanced again. Tugwell's statement wasn't quite as "wild" as the newspaper stories, he remarked, because Tugwell knew a little more about the budget than the newspaper men.

The President said he and his advisers were about to make a study of the financial situation, and that until the budget is finally drafted about the first of the year not even he knows what shape it will take. Every effort, he said, would be made to hold the regular government departments down to the figures of this fiscal year, but he would make no predictions as to emergency expenditures.

Carnegie Medals Awarded for Heroic Actions

MEDALS were awarded by the Carnegie hero fund commission to 47 men and children of the United States and Canada, or to their relatives in 11 cases. Most of the awards are for rescues of persons from drowning.

Two silver medals were awarded and 45 bronze. The silver ones went to James C. Martin, fifty-one-year-old Joplin (Mo.) laborer and Christine Stewart, thirty-five, of Brookline, Mass. Martin went into a sewage pit trying to save a fellow worker. Both drowned. Miss Stewart leaped into the sea near Bar Harbor, Me., in an attempt to save Emily McDougall, thirty-one. Rescuers pulled them out 40 minutes later. Miss McDougall died. Cash awards totaling $7,000 for educational purposes accompanied the medals in 14 cases, the commission announced. In 22 other cases, a total of $17,250 was granted for purchase of homes or "other worthy purposes."

Donahey May Be Placed on Democratic Ticket

POLITICAL gossip in Washington is that Senator Vic Donahey of Ohio may be invited by the administration to be the Democratic candidate for Vice President next year. Mr. Garner, of course, can have a re-nomination if he really wants it, but there is some reason to believe that he would prefer to retire to private life after nearly forty years of public service. Donahey's impressive victory over Simeon Fess in 1932 and his well known vote-getting ability lead some prominent Democrats to think it would be wise to put him on the ticket as Mr. Roosevelt's running mate, especially as Ohio is considered a pivotal state of the Middle West where battle will be hot.

Fake Fingerprints May Divert Police Suspicion

Fingerprints of different people, as we know, are never the same. But it is possible for a crook to imitate a genuine fingerprint so that the suspicion of the police can be diverted, says Pearson's Weekly.

How this can be done has been shown by Dr. Harold Cummins of the Tulane University of Medicine, Chicago. Taking an original genuine fingerprint, he had it engraved, and made a three dimensional negative in wax. Then he took a cast in gelatin on a dummy finger. Twelve of the 32 prints he made with the dummy finger were declared by fingerprint experts to be genuine.

Though this proportion is not very great, the United States authorities believe it is sufficient to allow criminals many opportunities to put the police on false trails.

HUNTING WALRUS IN THE ARCTIC A COMMUNAL AFFAIR

The Alaskan method of hunting walrus in the Arctic is extremely communal. Some of the men in kayaks—the skin boats just large enough for one occupant—take after the big beast and hurl their harpoons into it. The harpoon is in reality a spear with a loose point to which is attached a line ending in a bladder, to keep the walrus afloat after it is dead. Also attached to the line is a kind of drift anchor made of hide stretched across a square wooden frame, which prevents the walrus from traveling too far.

After the harpoon point is secured in the animal's skin, the killing must be done with spears which penetrate the lungs and intestines. This takes time, skill and bravery, as the natives cannot hurl the heavy spears from a great distance, and if the spear sticks in the walrus without killing it, the hunter has to row close enough to the prey to get his spear again, which is very dangerous.

It is always great fun to haul a walrus to shore and cut it up. Every man gets his share, and he knows from long precedent exactly what portion is his. The man who thrusts the first harpoon into the animal is the owner and receives the credit. For this he takes the head, the heart, the left flipper and the guts. Number two takes the right forepart; number three the left rear portion, and so on. I was lucky the first time and secured a forepart because I had killed the animal after some one else had harpooned it.—Peter Freuchen in Cosmopolitan.

According to PLAN

In a modern factory every step in production is carefully planned. Everything is run according to schedule, so that no effort is wasted.

A good many people have discovered that the same principle also applies to saving money, that casual, haphazard saving doesn't acomplish as much as planned saving according to a schedule.

Work out a plan of your own. Then stick to it for one year. At the end of that time, you will be more than pleased with the steady growth of your bank account.

LIBERTY FARMERS' UNION MET FOREPART OF MONTH

The November meeting of the Liberty Local of the Farmers Union was held the forepart of the month at the Liberty school house No. 7. The meeting was well attended.

The business meeting occupied the first part of the evening after which followed the program. An interesting feature of the program was the reading of a letter a member received from a native of Palestine. The author of the letter answered several questions about the country, government, customs and problems of Palestine. The letter was very interesting to all present.

The meeting was adjourned after lunch had been served by the committee.

The next meeting of the Liberty local of the Farmers' Union will be held at the Liberty school No. 7, on Monday evening, December 2nd. All members are urged to be present as the election of officers for the coming year will be held.

Lillian Hollatz Wed At Ventura

The marriage of Miss Lillian Hollatz and Arthur Boehnke was solemnized at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the St. Johns church near Ventura. The ceremony was witnessed by over a hundred relatives and friends. The contracting parties took their places in the front of the church, accompanied by the officiating minister, Rev. Wolfram of Garner. The bride and groom were attended by Alice Ransraz of Clear Lake, Laura Hollatz, Arnold Boehnke and Carl Hooft.

The bride was attired in a beautiful white satin dress with veil and accessories to match. Miss Ransraz wore an orchid satin dress and Miss Hollatz, a yellow satin dress. The two little flower girls, Margaret Boehnke and Arlene Rankin, were dressed in white.

After the ceremony, the bridal party and immediate relatives were served a six o'clock wedding dinner at the home of her parents. The centerpiece was a beautiful three tier wedding cake, baked and decorated by Mrs. John Day.

The couple left for a short wedding trip to Omaha and will make their home on the Boehnke farm.

The bride is a neice of Mrs. Lloyd Lau of this city.

BEN GREIMAN GIVES RESULTS OF TEN CORN TESTING PLOTS

Ben Greiman, Liberty township farmer, tells of the results of the corn test plots on ten Hancock Co. farms. Seven pounds of various seed corn was planted and calculations on the yield were made by testing out 45 hills. Following is the result:

Farm No	Hybrid 355	Pioneer Hybrid 323	Ames Hybrid 931	Farm Seed
1	....	80	72	70
2	....	65	....	50
3	....	92	100	84
4	....	62	....	49
5	....	81	....	54
6	....	72	55	....
7	....	85	72	....
8	57	....	....	58
9	....	94	....	68
10	....	74	....	59

Comparing No. 323 and No. 931, the average of Hybrid No. 323 is 82.25 bushels per acre, and No. 931 averaged 74.75 bushels per acre. The Hybrids show a substantial gain over regular farm seed.

Fred Schneider Married Sunday

County agent Frederick Schneider and Miss Elizabeth Laird were united in marriage Sunday in a simple afternoon ceremony at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Day Laird, between Sidney and Tabor. Immediately preceding the ceremony, Mrs. R. B. Laird sang "I Love You Truly." Rev. C. A. Speagh of Red Oak read the marriage lines. The bride wore a wine-colored velvet dress.

In addition to the bride's immediate family, those who attended were the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Schneider of Klemme; his sister, Doris Schneider and Dale Shriner of Moravia; Rev. and Mrs. Speagh of Red Oak; Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Laird and children of Sidney.

After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Schneider will be at home on the Woodlands property just east of the square.—Sidney (Iowa) Argus-Herald.

"TOP HAT" AT AVERY THIS SUNDAY, MONDAY & TUESDAY

The Avery management is proud to announce the coming of the season's finest musical show "Top Hat" starring the incomparable dancers, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers for Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 24, 25 and 26. "Top Hat" is a gay and glorious romance with huge scenes of lavish splendor with debonair Fred at his incomparable best; the distracting Ginger in her most impish mood; five tremendous song hits; scores of lovely girls; scenes of breath taking beauty. You will hear these tantalizing songs: "No Strings," "Isn't This A Lovely Day," "Top Hat," "Cheek to Cheek" and the fast singing and dancing number, "Piccolino."

Nothing so marvelous has been seen on the screen before. All the songs and lyrics for this production was written by the world's greatest song writer, Irving Berlin. Do not let anything interefere with your seeing "Top Hat". You will say it is the grandest show you ever sat thru. Remember the dates. Be sure and be here.

HIGHWAY PATROL WILL AID PHEASANT HUNTERS

Due to the increased motor vehicle traffic in certain sections of Iowa during the pheasant season, a number of extra policement have been assigned to the territory where hunting is permitted.

VARSITY DEFEATED 35-30 IN FAST GAME

Shamrocks Look Forward To Exceptional Season

The 1935-36 edition of the Klemme high school Shamrocks opened their cage season at Corwith Friday night, and although they were defeated 35-30, suffered no disgrace through their loss. On the contrary Klemme fans who saw the game, acclaimed them as one of the finest quintet of ball hawks ever produced at Klemme High.

Corwith High School has, in our opinion, one of the greatest teams to be found in North Iowa this year It will take a team with real power and speed to defeat them.

The Corwith lads started off with a bang and racked up two goals on the first two plays of the game, and then ran the count 10 to 2 before the Shamrocks could recover their stride. The quarter ended 10 to 7.

The second quarter was played on fairly even terms and the half ended with Corwith still leading 19-15.

Barracks, speedy Corwith forward broke loose at the start of the second half with a pair of goals and G. Evans added a couple more. Things looked fairly safe for the Corwith team as they went into the fourth quarter leading 29 to 19.

In the middle of the last period the Shamrocks started a drive that displayed part of the potential power they possess. With three minutes of play left they were behind 29 to 23. Brinkman and Kilgore released a couple of crowd-pleasers from the center of floor; Jorgenson laid one in from under the basket, Brinkman made good on a free throw and with 40 seconds of play left the score was Corwith 31, Klemme 30. The Corwith boys had plenty to worry about right then. But Barracks twice intercepted Shamrock passes and drove down the floor each time for a goal and as the whistle sounded Corwith led 35 to 30.

The Klemme boys showed up well and with a few more games experience should prove a formidable team. They have plenty of height and speed, and should not be handicapped by lack of experienced reserves.

Armistice Day Celebrated Throughout Nation

ARMISTICE day was celebrated in the United States more generally and elaborately than it had been since the first of those occasions seventeen years ago. Chief of all the ceremonies, naturally, was that at Arlington National cemetery in Washington, where many thousands gathered to hear an address by President Roosevelt. Standing before the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the Chief Executive paid a brief but eloquent tribute to the gallantry of America's fighting men in the World war, especially those who gave their lives in that conflict. Then, as the bugles sounded taps at 11 o'clock, he bared his head and stood silent for a minute, as did millions of his fellow citizens all over the land. The President next placed a wreath on the Unknown Soldier's tomb. For six hours, afterward, uniformed organizations marched up the hill in Arlington and laid their wreaths at the tomb.

President Roosevelt

The celebration in the national capital was culminated by a ball arranged by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Congressional Medal of Honor men headed the list of guests, others being cabinet officers, diplomats and high officials of the army, navy and marine corps. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was one of the guests.

Roosevelt Birthday Balls Will Be Repeated

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT will be fifty-four years old on January 30 next, and once more the day will be marked in many cities and towns by balls, the receipts from which will be devoted to the war on infant paralysis. Mr. Roosevelt announced his approval of the plan, which is fathered by Henry L. Doherty.

Doherty wrote to the President urging him to lend his name to a third series of birthday balls. He pointed out that the proceeds of the first ball enabled the Warm Springs Foundation in Georgia to carry on its program and the second financed and organized a major attack on the disease by research and provided funds for communities in which the balls were held.

Corn Husking Champion Sets World Record

NOT of vast importance, but interesting enough to command the presence of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and 100,000 other persons, was the twelfth annual national corn husking contest held on a farm at the village of Newtown, Ind.

The winner was Elmer Carlsen, twenty-six years old, of Audubon county, who was competing against 17 opponents, the winners and runner-ups of nine midwestern states' contests. Carlsen shucked 41.52 bushels of the golden corn in 80 minutes, which means that he ripped the ears from the stalks, tore the flimsy husks from them and pitched a gross weight of 2,995 pounds into his wagon. He lost 88.43 pounds deducted for gleanings left in the field and husks left on the corn.

Carlsen set a new world's record, the old one being 36.9 bushels, which mark was beaten also by four others of the contestants. The first prize was a check for $100 given by the Prairie Farmer. Mr. Wallace said the contest was "the best I've ever seen."

Italian King Celebrates His 66th Birthday

VICTOR EMMANUEL, king of Italy, celebrated his sixty-sixth birthday rather quietly because of the war in which his people are engaged in Africa. He reviewed a parade of armed forces, and with him was the real ruler of the country, Benito Mussolini. Il Duce then appeared on the balcony of his Venezia palace to address a great throng of cheering citizens in the plaza. He spoke just these two sentences:

King Victor Emmanuel

"The forces you have seen this morning with all their weapons, and especially in their spirit, are ready to defend Italy's interests in Europe, Africa or anywhere.

"In one month we have regulated two old accounts (apparently the Italian defeats at Aduwa and Makale, Ethiopia, in 1896) and the remainder will be settled later."

Mussolini that same evening sent to the nations participating in the sanctions against Italy a formal protest against their action, and warned them that Italy would be forced into reprisals with serious consequences to the economic world.

Meanwhile the Italian armies in Ethiopia were advancing steadily toward the interior from both the north and south. The strategic towns of Makale and Gorrahei were occupied practically without resistance. Harrar and Jijiga in the south and Dessye in the north were apparently the next major objectives. The Ethiopians, it was believed, would try to concentrate behind the invading columns to cut their communications.

Haile Selassie lost one of his ablest commanders in the death of General Afework, who was struck by an Italian bomb splinter during a bombardment of Gorrahei. He was educated in Europe and was skilled in military science.

Plot to Kill Ambassador Caffery Is Foiled

ONCE more Jefferson Caffery, American ambassador to Cuba, has been saved from assassination, the intelligence operatives of the Cuban army having discovered and thwarted the plot on the eve of its execution. Dispatches from Havana said the army officials believed the plot was nipped by the arrest of Cesar Villar, leader of the Confederation of Labor; that the assassination was to have taken place when Mr. Caffery left the embassy for home on November 1, and that six automobiles were ready to carry the assassins to a place of refuge. They believed the plot was inspired by radicals who seek to provoke American intervention in Cuba and hope this would bring on a revolution. It was said 29 men had been sworn to kill Mr. Caffery and certain others.

New Crisis in China Created by Japan

JAPAN'S apparent determination to dominate northern China has created another crisis in that oriental country, and Shanghai is involved for the Japanese have taken advantage of the slaying of a Japanese sailor there and landed a naval unit 2,000 strong which occupied the Hongkew section of the city.

As the Japanese force began patroling with fixed bayonets and full war equipment, international settlement authorities mobilized a White Russian regiment of Cossacks under Col. F. R. W. Graham, British army officer detailed as commander of the local volunteer units. The Cossacks, paid by the international settlement, constitute a small standing army for the foreign quarter.

The Chinese were terrified and thousands of them fled from the native quarter to the international settlement, believing the Japanese intended military action in retribution for the murder of the sailor. This the Japanese government denied, but it declared the situation was "serious."

In Tokyo officials of the navy and foreign office met to discuss their policy, and it was reported that development plans for northern China were decided upon. Meanwhile Japanese military authorities at Tientsin invited to their headquarters Gen. Hsiao Chen-ying, chairman of the Chahar provincial government; Gen. Sung Cheyuan, head of the Peiping-Tientsin defense corps; Mayor Chin Teh-ching of Peiping, and Mayor Chen Ko of Tientsin to explain the army's new policy.

According to information from Japanese sources these Chinese leaders "have come to a strong determination that North China cannot exist unless it co-operates with Japan and Manchukuo by cutting away from Nanking."

Army Balloonists Soar to Record Height

CAPTS. ALBERT W. STEVENS and Orvil A. Anderson of the army made their long delayed balloon voyage into the stratosphere, and if their barometric computations are sustained they reached the record altitude of 74,000 feet. Their balloon rose from near Rapid City, S. D., and landed safely near White Lake, S. D., eight hours and thirteen minutes later.

Steel Helmets Dissolved by Hitler's Order

BY ORDER of Reichsfuehrer Hitler, the Steel Helmet association of war veterans has been dissolved. This was highly satisfactory to the Hitlerites, who considered the association a rallying point for the conservatives. In a letter to Franz Seldte, founder and leader of the Steel Helmets, Hitler praised the veterans for "keeping alive traditions of the old army and striving for restoration of a strong reich," but said he deemed this goal achieved and the association no longer needed. Members will be admitted to the Nazi party if found acceptable.

Old conservatives are bitter over the abolition of the Steel Helmet organization. It is reported that the junkers (landed aristocracy), who at first co-operated with Hitler, are withdrawing to their estates. Farmers allege the junkers are not doing their utmost to help increase agricultural production.

Both Parties Find Cheer in State Elections

REPUBLICANS shouted loudly that the victory of their party in the New York state election was a terrific blow to the New Deal and a repudiation of President Roosevelt. The Democrats declared it was no such thing. James A. Farley, who is both national and state chairman of the Democrats, gave them their cue when he declared recapture of control of the legislature by the G. O. P. was "normal" and that the Democratic vote for assembly candidates taken as a whole exceeded the Republican vote by more than half a million, which was something of an exaggeration.

J. A. Farley

The Republicans gained nine additional seats in the assembly, giving them 82 to 68 held by the Democrats. Only two senate seats were involved in the contest, both to fill vacancies. One of them went to a Republican and the other to a Democrat, leaving the setup of the upper legislative body unchanged.

In 45 cities of the state, the Republicans elected 33 mayors, including Roland B. Marvin of Syracuse, possible nominee for governor next year. The President saw Hyde Park go Republican and Farley failed to hold his own district in Rockland county.

The Democratic organization in New York came through strongly and menaces the prospect of a re-election for Mayor LaGuardia, observers hold. The Fusion forces, which turned Tammany out two years ago, crumbled.

In Philadelphia S. Davis Wilson, Republican, was elected mayor but the vote was close enough for the Democrats to call it a virtual victory for the New Deal. Cleveland, Columbus and 23 out of 42 other cities and towns in Ohio chose Republican mayors, and so did a number of municipalities in Massachusetts. Connecticut Socialists re-elected Jasper McLevy mayor, and Democratic mayors were returned in Hartford and New Haven. Republicans gained control of the New Jersey legislature, but Hudson county, including Jersey City, went Democratic by a record vote.

Results in the spectacular election in Kentucky gave the New Dealers a real reason for rejoicing, for A. B. Chandler, known as "Happy," the Democratic candidate for governor who had the support of the national administration, handily defeated Judge King Swope, the Republican nominee. This despite the fact that Democratic Governor Lafoon had declared himself against Chandler and threw his support to Swope. The referendum on repeal of the state prohibition amendment gave the repealists a good majority.

In Virginia and Mississippi all the Democratic nominees were elected, which was to be expected.

George Accepts Offer of Greek Throne

THREE Greeks went to London to invite George II to return to the throne, in accordance with the plebescite of the Greek people. Deeply moved, he replied:

"I shall never forget the past. I shall return almost immediately to my beloved people. May we have divine guidance to bring happiness, peace, and prosperity to our Greece!"

Following the ceremony, the forty-five year-old monarch, with the Princes Paul and Peter and the Princesses Catherine and Olga, the latter a sister of the duchess of Kent, attended a special service of thanksgiving at the Greek orthodox church. Then the Greek king lunched with King George and Queen Mary of England at Buckingham palace.

Norris Wishes to Retire From the Senate

GEORGE W. NORRIS, veteran Republican independent senator from Nebraska, has announced that he desires to retire from the senate. He is seventy-four years old, and has served 32 years, including ten in the lower house, and said: "I am no candidate. I am getting old. Younger men can and should carry on the work which I have tried to do during my years as senator."

Senator Norris

His friends in Washington and Nebraska could not see any available fit man to succeed Norris, and expressed the belief that he could be persuaded to run again, either as a Republican, or as an independent if both parties in Nebraska nominate men whom he regards as stand-patters.

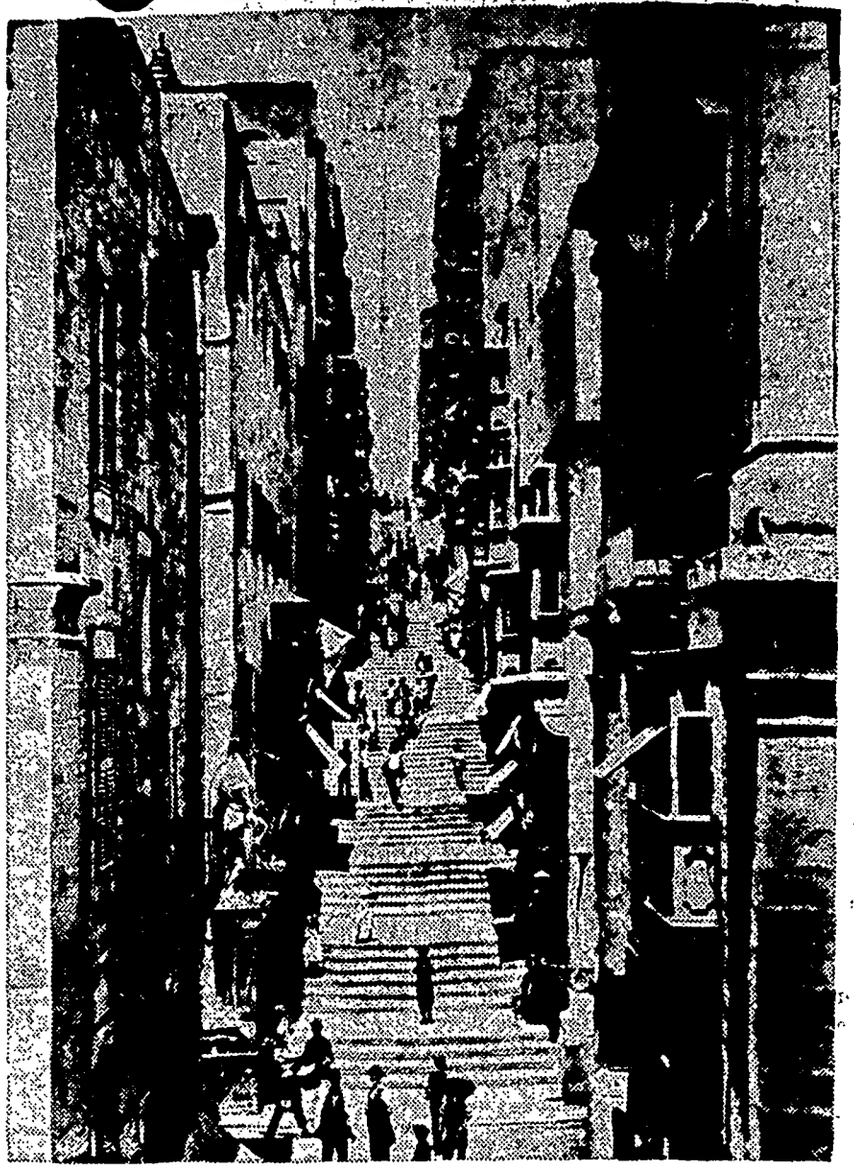
Senator Borah of Idaho, informed of Norris' announcement, said: "If I could do it, I would command him, for his country's sake, to change his mind."

Roosevelt Will Visit Chicago Dec. 9

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has accepted an invitation from Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, to appear before that organization in Chicago on December 9 and deliver an address. Mr. Roosevelt will arrive in Chicago at nine o'clock that morning, make his speech, and start back to Washington three hours later.

The President's promised trip to Indiana to take part in the dedication of a memorial to George Rogers Clark at Vincennes has been postponed until June of next year, when he will also visit the Texas centennial exposition in Dallas.

"GIB" and MALTA



A Street in Valetta.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

GIBRALTAR, western gateway to the Mediterranean, and Malta, the mid-Mediterranean sentinel, both British-owned, have been brought into the news spotlight because of the Italo-Ethiopian political situation.

The fortified rock of Gibraltar, long the symbol of strength, rears its lofty summit above the north bank of the 14-mile-wide Strait of Gibraltar. It is known to every school child; yet there is, at its base, a city named for the rock, that is, perhaps, known to but few.

Giraltar is a British city if the traveler confines his observations to British soldiers who are everywhere, British "Bobbies" who appear as if they had just emerged from a London police station, British flags that top the masts of municipal and government buildings, and British warships and commercial vessels that outnumber all others anchored in the harbor.

But a glance at the street crowds and the city's buildings reveals a strange mixture. Most Gibraltar buildings are Spanish in design. Its narrow streets are crowded with bustling throngs from many parts of the world. Scotchmen in kilts brush past turbaned Moors from the other side of the strait; Spaniards from Madrid, Malaga, and Cadiz mingle with sturdy Greeks; ruddy-skinned Hindus and Egyptians jostle Levantine Jews in gaberdines; and dusky Senegal negroes rub elbows with Chinese from Canton. And weaving in and out of the human mass are hundreds of foreign seamen from boats that come to Gibraltar for fuel, trade, and repairs.

Town Climbs the Rock.

The town begins at the shore of the broad bay and rises 250 feet up the north side of the rock. Long flights of steps lead to the upper portion of the town, making wheeled traffic impossible on many streets. The Mediterranean, or south side of the rock, is almost a sheer cliff. Fishermen have built, however, small villages in the few recesses which are reached by narrow paths.

Between Spain and the British territory is a narrow strip of land called the neutral zone where travelers get the best land view of the rock. The giant mass of stone was one of the Pillars of Hercules of ancient times.

The rock's highest point is more than twice the height of the Washington monument or about 100 feet higher than the world's tallest building. Since the Moors first occupied Gibraltar centuries ago, its face has frequently undergone "treatment." A fortified castle dating back to Moorish occupation still stands in one of its recesses, sharply contrasting with the more modern British ramparts. Tunnels have been bored, paths dynamited and in places its rough "countenance" has been given an application of cement upon which rainwater is caught and drained into reservoirs of the town. In natural caves in the rock live the famous Gibraltar monkeys, probably the only monkeys in Europe that were not brought there by men in modern times. The animals are protected by law and are fed by the British army.

The city took its name from the rock, which was called Mount Abyla or Apes Hill in ancient times. It was once owned by the Phoenicians and fell, in turn, to the Carthaginians, Romans and Visigoths.

In the Eighth century the Moorish chief, Tarik-Ibn-Zeyad, landed on the rock and called it Gibel-Tarik or Mountain of Tarik, of which "Gibraltar" is a curruption.

The Moors had held Gibraltar for six centuries when in 1309 the Spanish seized it, but 24 years later the Moslems regained possession. It became Spanish territory again in 1462. The British have held the rock since 1704 when they defeated a combined Spanish and French fleet. Since, the British have had frequent wars over Gibraltar's possession. One Spanish siege lasted four years (1779-1783).

Malta a Strong Base.

For more than a century Malta has sheltered powerful British warships guarding sea lanes to Mediterranean ports, and, in more recent years, to India, Australia, and the Far East via the Suez canal. Now it is a strong aerial base as well.

Malta deserves attention, however, for other than military or strategic reasons. On the little island an ancient race still lives and speaks an otherwise extinct tongue. Recently Great Britain suspended Malta's constitution to combat a movement to turn Malta to the Italian language in preference to English or the islanders' own unique speech.

Planted by fate at a strategic point on one of the world's great marine highways, this drab piece of land, less than a hundred square miles in area, has been called to fill an important role in the history of the world.

Malta and its satellite islands were once linked to Africa and Europe by a land bridge. With the sinking of this link, the islands were left standing like sentinels between the eastern and western basins of the Mediterranean, 58 miles from Sicily and 180 miles from Africa, near the narrowest part of the sea.

Now Malta guards the direct route from Gibraltar to Great Britain's eastern empire. Perfect harbors make it an ideal naval base. Lately it has become a hub of commercial, as well as military air traffic in the region. Besides the main island, the group comprises Gozo, Comino, the islet of Cominotto, and Filfla, a rock used by the British for naval target practice.

Malta has been called the stepchild, as well as the "stepping stone," of the Mediterranean. Since the dawn of its recorded history, many nationalities have ruled it, beginning with the Phoenicians, and running a range which includes Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Arabs, Normans, French, and British.

Maltese a Race Alone.

But though always under a foreign flag, the Maltese retained their racial identity. Handsome, good-humored, and sturdy, they are believed to be remnants of the great Mediterranean race which peopled the shores of this storied sea long before the rise of Greece and Rome.

Their present speech is derived from the language of the Phoenicians, whose ships more than 3,000 years ago floated in Malta's harbors as do the British men-of-war today. Among the upper classes and the younger generation it is being replaced by English and Italian.

Weaving a pattern of mystery over the island are deep parallel lines in the solid rock, believed to be the tracks of ancient cart wheels. Some plunge beneath an arm of the sea and reappear on the other side—testimony to the comings and goings of a people who dwelt here before the land assumed its present shape. Neolithic temples also have been found.

Christianity was brought to Malta in 58 A. D. by a castaway on its shores—the Apostle Paul. Fifteen centuries later this island, thrust out toward the East and Africa, won the name of "the shield of Christendom" when the valiant Knights of Malta beat back the Turkish hordes. In memory of the victory the grand master founded Valetta, a city "built by gentlemen for gentlemen."

The knights, their power declining, eventually were expelled by Napoleon Bonaparte, who entered the harbor in 1798 on his way to Egypt. A revolt against the French garrison, combined with the assistance of the British fleet under Lord Nelson, resulted in surrender of the islands in September, 1800, and since that time they have been under British rule.

Mechanized Army Equipment Shown by Ordnance Corps

Try Rapid-Fire Rifles and Anti-Aircraft Guns

ABERDEEN, MD.—Fast-firing rifles for the foot-soldier, heavy artillery that travels across country at express-train speed, new-type anti-aircraft ammunition that makes the skies unsafe for bombing planes, were shown at the Army Ordnance field day held under the auspices of the Army Ordnance association at the Aberdeen proving grounds here.

Sensational increase in both rapidity and accuracy of rifle fire were demonstrated with the new semi-automatic rifles now in final stages of experimental testing, and soon to be adopted as standard armament for the United States army and National Guard. In these, the recoil of the piece reloads and cocks the weapon, so that the soldier can keep his sights on the target all the time, and fire as fast as he can pull the trigger. The old jerking back of the bolt action breech mechanism, which takes time and necessitates reaiming for every shot, is eliminated.

Anti-Aircraft Artillery.

Quite as sensational was the demonstration of the 3-inch anti-aircraft artillery. Each gun can send 15-pound high-explosive shells whizzing skyward at nearly one shot every two seconds. So accurate are the fire-directing devices, and so exact the timing of the new clockwork fuses that it has been possible to substitute high-explosive shells for the shrapnel used by the old war-time "archies." Sleeve targets towed through the air by airplanes were riddled with fragments from the bursts. On one occasion, officers stated, an extra-close burst autually set fire to the target.

Less swift and lively, but more awesome, were some of the heavy-ordnance demonstrations. The day started with the firing of a shot apiece from a 16-inch and a 14-inch gun, of the coast defense type. The massive projectiles, fired at high elevation, roared away from the group of spectators until their noise died away to a mere whisper in the distance.

Bombing Practice.

Later, a heavy bombing plane dropped a one-ton bomb, largest weapon of its kind, into the marshes beyond the proving ground, with a terrific roar and a towering geyser of muddy water.

Artillery and tanks of all varieties went through their paces, from the swift, lightly armored and armed types that have taken over much of the old work of the cavalry, to the ponderous but still high-speed trucks and tractors that can tow guns and howitzers of 6 and 8-inch caliber into position at over 45 miles an hour.

Unearth Shark Skull 225 Million Years Old in New Mexico

BERKELEY, CALIF. — The fossilized skull of a shark which inhabited the fresh water streams of New Mexico in the Paleozoic geologic era of about 225,000,000 years ago, has been found in New Mexico, by a party of University of California scientists. Thirteen skulls of amphibians of the same era, and numerous fragments of as yet unclassed reptiles, were also uncovered.

The skull of the shark was about six inches wide and a foot long. This animal was probably four feet in length. It had teeth not more than a quarter inch in length, and large gill arches.

The largest of the amphibian skulls was ten inches in length and eight inches wide. The body of this animal was about four feet long. Its entire bodily structure was thin and delicate. A peculiar feature was the existence of four spines, which projected back over its neck. In appearance it resembled somewhat the giant salamander found in Japan today.

These remains were found embedded in the side of a hill near the head of a dry stream bed, the Arryo de Agua, which is about sixty miles northeast of the city of Santa Fe.

Ancient Africans Owned Better Teeth Than We

LONDON.—Dental caries or cavities render doubtful any really great age for several apparently primitive skulls found in Africa during recent years, in the opinion of Prof. T. F. Dreyer of Grey University college, Bloemfontein, South Africa.

Professor Dreyer has examined teeth from between 30 and 35 burials in South Africa, known to date far back into the Old Stone age, and he has not found a single one of them with caries.

Household Heating Has Its Dangers: Don't Be Careless!

Carbon Monoxide Gas Is Chief Safety Threat

IT SEEMS just yesterday, or at the most the day before, that we were looking for scientific guidance on how to avoid the dangers and discomforts of hot weather. Now we are reminded that winter, as well as summer, has hazards connected with heat.

The winter-time dangers of household heating are pointed out by Dr. Wilmer H. Schulze of the Baltimore City Health department. Chief of these dangers is that of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Beware Carbon Monoxide.

"Keep in mind the fact that any fuel, whether wood, coal, oil, or gas, when incompletely burned, produces varying amounts of the poisonous gas, carbon monoxide," Doctor Schulze cautions. "In order to avoid contaminating the air in your home with this gas, the products of combustion from the heating plant and piped into a chimney and escape into the outside air. As long as there is no obstruction to the free passage of the gases to the outside, there is little danger of a carbon-monoxide hazard.

"Accumulations of soot in chimneys and vent pipes, solid objects which have fallen into the chimney or something that is entirely shutting off the chimney draft may result in carbon monoxide permeating the house because of incompletely burned fuel. To avoid such an occurrence, it is best to inspect your heating plant before it is placed in operation for the winter months and periodically during the heating season.

Gas Kills Insidiously.

"Remember that carbon monoxide is a very poisonous gas and, like a thief in the night, sometimes catches persons unawares."

Further discussing potential heating hazards in homes, Doctor Schulze stresses the value of placing ashes in metal receptacles.

"The use of wooden or cardboard containers may cause a fire, probably during the night. Never attempt to start a fire by pouring inflammable liquids, such as kerosene, on the paper or wood fuel; a dangerous explosion is likely to result from such a practice.

"Frequently we augment the general heating system in the home by the use of room heaters on cool evenings in the fall or on extremely cold nights during the winter. Probably the most popular types of heaters are those which burn gas. Room heating should be connected with rigid metal piping whenever possible.

"Never use plain rubber tubing or flexible spiral-metal tubing on gas appliances. These soon deteriorate, crack and allow unburned gas to escape. It is safer not to permit a gas appliance to operate in a room throughout the whole night. An accident may cause the flame to be extinguished, with the result that the occupants of the room are exposed to dangerous amounts of carbon monoxide while asleep.

"If during the operation of your heating plant or room heaters you notice persistent headaches, which are sometimes accompanied by nausea or vomiting, it may be that carbon monoxide is escaping into the house. Look into the matter at once before a more serious result follows," Doctor Schulze urges.

Frozen Bread Stays Fresh and Sweet; Its Aroma, Flavor Better

FROZEN bread is the newest idea in the baking industry, and the most promising.

Public demand for fresh bread has kept bakers continuously working on a hand-to-mouth schedule. Now, they are trying something that may keep their product a week.

To hunt for some good way of delaying staleness of bread, the American Association of Cereal Chemists tried effects of both heat and cold.

Stored hot, that is, up toward 150 degrees Fahrenheit, bread would become stale more slowly, but flavor and color were "discouraging."

At moderate temperatures, say 50 to 90 degrees, nothing surprising could be expected. Every one knows how bread grows stale in ordinary circumstances.

But effects of freezing surprised the experimenters. The bread became partially stale, according to technical tests of penetration. Yet the aroma and flavor were pronounced as good as, or even better than, in freshly baked bread. At a recent meeting of New York cereal chemists, the assembled chemists were fed bread that had been kept a week below freezing and also bread baked the previous day and handled in ordinary fashion. The majority voted for the week-old product, for aroma and flavor.

If the tests, now being continued, prove satisfactory, the baking industry seems likely to win a considerable advantage. Shipment of bakery goods to more remote points and better adjustment of supply and demand, with less waste, are possible benefits.

Holland has already tried out this idea of freezing bread.

CHEER LEADERS

Friday afternoon we held an election to see who should lead our cheering section this year. The upshot of the affair was that Franklin Kluckhohn, his little sister, Cammen and Nora Wellemeyer were unanimously elected. And did we have a pep meeting?

BOOKS

The county supervisors contributed four books to the Klemme High School library; namely "Your Money's Worth," which presents arguments against high presure salesmanship, either through advertising or personal contacts. "Sorrel and Son" tells of the hardship and sacrifices of a father and son. "Andree's Story" relates what happened to the first man who dared to fly over the pole, and how many years later records were discovered which told what happened up to the time they died. "On the Bottom" is a stirring story of a battle "in the water under the earth." It tells of the perils of the divers, and the quiet courage of men who while alone in the water fight unseen terors.

OUR INDIAN STUDY

Group Composition by 3rd Grade

The third grade are studying about Indians, We had a collection Indian articles on exhibit in our room. Some of the children and Mrs. Schaeffer brought things for our exhibit. Chi-Wee is our Indian child. Miss Azeltine s reading to us about her. We made a pueblo of clay, because this is the kind of home that Chi-Wee lives in.

THUMBNAIL BIOGRAPHIES

This week we have two whose birthdays happen to come pretty close to this issue of the Sqealer.

Virgil Stille was born four and one-half miles south of Klemme on November 20, 1921. He started to school at Liberty No. 8., and finished a B Class student. At the present he is a freshman in Klemme high school. Some of his notable features are his blond, wavy hair, his sparkling eyes, and his eye for brunettes. —Eugene Kluckhohn

Raymond Arthur Jorgenson, Jr., was born November 17, 1920. He is being eductaed in the Klemme public school. He graduated from the eighth grade in 1934 and continued on into high school. He is called "Buster" most of the time but very often it is "Jergie." He is now six feet, one inch tall and weighs one hundred and forty-five pounds. His greatest ambition is to enter a naval academy when he has finished his high school courses. His chief ambition now seems to me, to be pulling some trick on some one else. —Paul Schuldt

EDITORIAL

We are now taking off on a flight through the 1935-36 basketball season and we are starting out with the idea of winning, but winning fairly. There is more to basketball than just winning the games, as everyone should know. We receive good physical training and also learn what sportsmanship is. If we don't win all the time we learn not to be prejudiced against our opponents, and when we do win we learn not to feel uppish toward the other team. Although we may not come out on top all the time it doesn't mean we haven't a good team. Iowa ,although defeated in the game with Minnesota, is rated by all the experts as one of the best teame ni the country. I think this should bring home to us the fact that we needn t worry if we lose once in awhile.

INQUIRING REPORTER

What Good Shows Are You Looking Forward To?

Billie Lemke—The show I am looking forward to is "Mutiny On The Bounty". It is about some men who a long time ago went to sea on the good ship "Bounty." The captain is so cruel that he kills some of the men on his ship. The others finally are driven to mutiny. One of the leaders marries a Hawaiian girl and stays on the island rather than return to England to face mutiny charges. One of the men goes back to England and is put in prison for a number of years. When he goes back to Hawaii to get the girl he left behind he finds that she died a few months after he left.

Another good show is "The Call of the Wild." This is one of Jack London's stories and is about a dog.

Arlene Krauls—I am looking froward to the shows "Way Down East," "This is the Life," "Old Man Rhythm" and "Billy, the Kid." I would like to see these shows because I like the actors that are playing in them. I also like music which is to be given in these shows.

Wilma Swalve—I am looking forward to the shows "Top Hat," and "Call of the Wild." I would like to see these two because Clark Gable and Loretta Young are acting in the latter and Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in the fomer. Besides, I like to see shows that have lots of dancing and music.

....Dolorys Cook—The show that I am looking forward to, is "Mutiny n the Bounty." It has an unusually fine cast, and I believe the characters will portray their parts to the best of their ability. I might add, too, that this picture is taken from a true incident. Therefore, it should be all the more interesting.

GIRLS BASKETBALL

The boys haven't a thing over us girls when it comes to the line of sports. We girls have organized a basketball club. There are 20 robust, healthy looking lasses. We have green suits and are divided into two groups; one of which has green K's; the other group, white K's. Although we are striving to learn, we still believe our referee, Brinkman, gets a better workout than we. This is part of our physical training schedule.

DID YOU KNOW?

Do you know what year Klemme High School had its first basketball team? Answer in next week's Squealer.

Answer to last week's question: The school we are now using was built in two different years. The grade school rooms were built in 1905. The high school rooms, the gym and the stage were built in 1923.

OUR LIBRARY

Group Composition by 4th Grade

We have made a library for our room. We are trying to make it as nearly like a real library as we can. Each week we have a different person for the librarian. The librarian checks out books to the children, sees that the library rules are obeyed, and keeps the library in order. We have made our library an attractive place to do our library reading.

In home economics this week we are learning to plan good luncheon or supper menus that we can prepare at home. To do this we must not only "count our calories" but also see that all foodstuffs are represented; that there are some complete proteins; that there are enough iron, calcium, and phosphorous yielding foods, that the vitamins A, B and C are well represented, that there is enough roughage, and that the menu is digestible, seasonable, palatable and attractive in apearance.

Here are two menus planned by Stella Barz and Marva Jean Bredlow which we have tested and approved:

Cream of Tomato Soup
Graham Bread Butter Cocoa
Cabbage and Banana Salad

Baked Beans
Buttered whole wheat toast
Lettuce and Pimento Salad
Milk

—Eva May Jensen

The freshman English class had the story "The Gold Bug" this week. We experimented with lemon juice, and exposing it to heat to see if it would make the message visible. One incident in the story was based on heating a piece of parchment to bring out some writing that had been done with a chemical. We learned that Poe liked to write stories of horror or mystery. We decided we would rather read one that had more horror in it.

On Thursday we wrote themes in which we confessed or told about some of he things we usde to do when we were children.

The boys in manual arts are making necktie racks.

I was caught in algebra class chewing gum that means only one thing. Stay home from the show awhile. —Harold Wicks

Seniors

The seniors in English Literature have finished "The Tragedy of Macbeth" written by William Shakespeare. Of course, we would sooner read something about Bill Shakespeare, the Notre Dame football player.

In biology we have been studying about insects and pests. If people would come to visit school they might think that this was a Biological Museum because we are regular "pests," but we are full of life and have plenty of speed. That's more than any other class can "crow" about. —Evert Barz

Sophomore

The world history class is studying about the persecution of the early Christian church. We learn of the great men who were burned at the stake or put to death in some cruel way.

The sophomore class in geometry have been proving theroms of congruence. This is unit three in our geometry book.

In biology class the main topic for the week has been mammals. We have been studying the characteristics, adaptions, and other interesting things about mammals.

The sophomore English class has been studying verbs. We will also write a theme Friday in which we will try to express ourselves more artistically. We will try to use new adjectives and figures of speech.

The agriculture class has just completed the study of the grass plants. We have also learned their uses and the section of the country in which they grow. We are now starting to study about the legumes, which is a ver important group of crops. We have learned the general differences between the legumes and the grass plants. We have taken some of the legumes in detail, some of which are the rlovers and alfalfa.

Juniors

In American History we are quite occupied this week with filling out our workbooks so they will be ready to hand in by Wednesday.

In Typing we are now ready for a speed test. We are making error charts at this time.

In English we are studying one of Longfellow's longer poems. It is "Evangeline.

In business arithmetic we are trying all kinds of shorter methods to do problems that are ordinarily quite long by the common way of working them.

Thoughts---
---At The Linotype

By ETAOIN SHRDLU

He was boasting of his success in "affairs of the heart," and said: "I always get in good with her folks." I notice that he is still quite hesitant about calling for his "latest" at her home.

If the school teacher thought the young lad was "old enough to know better." I wonder just what Emily Post would have to say about her actions in the matter?

Strange as it may seem, the local swains usually are in a slightly spifflicated condition when seen in the company of a local belle. Are her kisses as intoxicating as all that; or do we have to look elsewhere for the reason,

And might I inquire as to the cause of this girls acute embarrassment one day last week?

Correct this sentence: "No, thank you, Daddy, I don't want you to give me any money because I have had enough candy already.

'Member one summer night about a year ago when two rivals for a local lady's hand were scheduled to engage in fistic combat at the park. Quite a crowd gathered to enjoy the sport. But, it seemed as though one of the lads hired an understudy to take his place However he failed to show up with the financial reimbursement for his "stand-in" and the duel was called off. Lots of threats, but no actions.

Hill-billys in Arkansas are bidding for the Iowa tourist trade with the slogan "You can't go wrong in the Ozarks." Maybe that's where the traveling school teachers go.

"How" demands the agitator, 'can a man be a Christian on $12 a week?" On the other hand, how can he be anything else?

Your Best Flare Forward in Simple, All-Occasion Frock

PATTERN 2397

There's many a "flare" in the fashion sky this fall, and no smart skirt will dare sally forth without at least one. This charming all-occasion frock has flares both back and front, thus assuring its wearer plenty of style interest. The drop-shoulder yoke points twice in front, once in back, to the bodice and puffed sleeves which gather round it. Utterly charming, the tiny round collar which tops the yoke's diagonal closing, and don't you love the young way the sleeves puff about the elbow? There are novelty crepes with plenty of surface interest from which to choose—or if you're out to be very practical, select a sheer wool.

Pattern 2397 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 3¾ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 243 West Seventeenth St., New York City.

Eavesdropping on the "Monticello Party Line"

"The Monticello Party Line" is a radio program recently begun on a series of middle-western and southern radio stations. The radio listener is asked to imagine that he is eavesdropping on the party line of Monticello—and in this way he daily hears all the activity, the gossip, the fun, and the occasional trouble, that marks life in Monticello.

All the people in this program are thoroughly natural, everyday folks. The setting is that of a real town—Monticello, Illinois—the home-town of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the product that sponsors this new and different radio show. "The Monticello Party Line" is broadcast every week-day except Saturday.—Adv.

A Severe Test

It is one of the severest tests of friendship to tell your friend his faults. So, to love a man that you cannot bear to see a stain upon him, and to speak painful truth through loving words, that is friendship.—H. W. Beecher.

Sculptor Loses Fortune and Bemoans His Fate

A talented young sculptor was the last to arrive at the party. He seemed gloomy and dejected and the smile was missing from his usually cheerful countenance. As he seated himself beside the Woman she found it unnecessary to ask the cause for his dejection, for he immediately informed her ruefully, "I lost $2,500 today."

The Woman was surprised. Although he is a talented young man he has not yet reached the stage in his career where he can turn his talent into a means of livelihood. He has difficulty selling his work and the woman never would have suspected that he owned so much money. She said nothing and he continued, "I'm so mad at myself. It's all my own fault, too."

Her curiosity prompted her to put the question for which he was waiting. "What happened?" she asked.

He seemed glad to unburden his troubled soul. "I wanted to bet on the horse that came in first today and if I had, I'd have won $2,500. But I didn't have the $12 to put on him—darn it. I'm as mad as hops at myself—all that money lost."—New York Sun.

Something About Billions
Earthquakes
Marvelous New Cars
News From Ethiopia

Silas H. Strawn, once head of the American Bar association and president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, says the country is spending $7,000 a minute, and thinks it is too much. Your small boy will tell you how much $7,000 a minute makes in one year. Once "all the world wondered," or at least we did, when there was talk of spending one-quarter of a billion on the Panama canal. Now, any professor could spend that, after three minutes' thinking, and news that the nation's deficit has increased fifteen hundred millions in the past few weeks startles nobody.

Arthur Brisbane

The world has passed through earthquake week. Earthquakes in Montana, greatest sufferer on this continent. Severe shocks are reported in Siam.

Earthquakes in Buffalo, N. Y.; Ottawa, Toronto, Guayaquil, Ecuador; a busy seismographic week.

And the moon is partly to blame. Its power of gravitation exercises a strong pull on the earth, as it shows in lifting the ocean tides. Dr. Harlan T. Stetson, of Harvard, says the moon causes "sub-surface adjustments of the earth."

The new cars of 1936, now on exhibition, are so extraordinarily beautiful that every American should see them, regardless of intention to buy a new car. Most encouraging is the determined energy that business men and engineers of the automobile industry have shown in fighting the depression, while improving that which seemed beyond improvement.

Rome gives confirmation of the slaughter of six thousand women and children by Ethiopian warriors taking vengeance on the fathers of the children who deserted to Italy. Rome also reports the killing of five hundred Ethiopians by Italian bombing planes, and "an attempt to assassinate Haile Selassie by an unnamed American negro."

Haile Selassie of Ethiopia has "flung the last available man into the battle line," relying on old men, young boys and women to run his government, reminding you of the late czar's announcement that he was going to send "his last moujik." He did not live to do that.

The national effort to "buy ourselves out of the hole" encounters difficulties. The President, to make his four billions cash spread as far as possible, announced top wages of $93 a month. But union labor says, "No; you must pay us full union wages," and New York may have a state-wide strike to back the demand. President Roosevelt, it is said, refuses to concede that public relief is a branch of union labor, and, even with 1936 looming ahead, may insist that two governments in the country are one too many.

Heavy windstorms in Florida so late in the season are disturbing. Inhabitants are moved away from the keys. There is no danger, however, to those that occupy houses properly constructed and know enough to stay in them during the short time that the storm lasts.

Greece is ready to take back her king and many Greeks are growing "spike" mustaches like his. Many Germans grew mustaches, curling upward, to imitate their former kaiser. There is not much in imitating mustaches.

You wonder why the Greeks cannot find a Greek for king, if they must have a king. In days of "the glory that was Greece" it wasn't necessary to go outside among "barbarians" to find a ruler.

You may want to know that in England, where good times have really come back, the Tories have made heavy gains at the present election and the Labor party sustains heavy losses. Ramsay MacDonald, head of Britain's first Labor government, rejoices openly at labor's downfall. His work as prime minister seems to have changed his opinions. Experience often changes our minds.

"It is a very great rebuff for labor," says MacDonald. "The people are not being taken in by wild and reckless promises which they know cannot be carried out, in municipal or national government."

Ed Howe, an able writer of Kansas, is expected to "put aside his pencil and pen forever," because his doctor warns him that blindness is approaching.

Perhaps Mr. Howe will tell his doctor: "Milton did much of his important writing after he was totally blind, and I can do the same." Mr. Howe can use a dictating machine, whereas Milton dictated to his daughters, who, uneducated, found it difficult to write down his Latin dictation.

Family of 18 Eats on $30 Per Month

Edward Schultz, with a relief allowance of $30 a month for food, has managed to feed—and to feed pretty well—a family of 18. First Indian Constitution Given

Smashing traditions of ignoring Indian tribal government, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes signed and presented to delegates of the confederated tribes of the Flathead Indian reservation in Montana the first constitution and by-laws to be issued under the Indian Reorganization act. The unprecedented document was ratified by the Indians at a popular referendum and is the first such constitution to be approved by the government in the history of the United States. Left to right: Sub-Chief Victor Vandenberg; Chief Martin Charlo, and Secretary Ickes. The chiefs did not speak of visions of the day when political wrangling will present their constitution as an issue

Beck Leads Germany's Reconstructed Army

Germany's reconstructed army, now headed by Gen. Ludwig Beck, is shown above. As chief of the general staff he is put in a class with Moltke, Schlieffen and Von Hindenburg. The formal reconstruction of the German general staff has been looked upon as another abrogation of the Treaty of Versailles.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—Several times in these columns I have adverted to criticisms that have been made of the Constitution and have reported the nature of attempts to obtain amendment of that instrument which is as old as our nation itself. I have reported to you also how President Roosevelt, himself had hinted, if he has not said openly, that the Constitution ought to be amended so that some of the policies for which he and his New Deal party could be made operative. I have called attention as well to an apparent assurance that there will be a political campaign battle next year on these questions.

Now, because of developments within the past few weeks, I propose to discuss another phase of these attacks upon the Constitution and their concealed purpose. Frankly, I cannot avoid the conclusion that many of the criticisms against our Constitution have as their objective the clipping of wings of the Supreme court of the United States. I am convinced that many of the demands for amendment of the Constitution to permit broader latitude to Congress are nothing more nor less than a disguised move to take away from the court of the independence which the court has and which, in my opinion, it ought always to possess. Further, there is no doubt that these "borings from within" represent the activities of individuals of whom there are thousands who are not in sympathy with our form of government. So, if I am to serve my purpose as your observer in Washington, I would fall short of my duty were I not to say that in the election of the next congress lies the answer whether we will retain our Constitution and our traditions as a republic or whether we will change into some form of state socialism or of a proletarian government similar to that of Russia.

It was back in 1904 that the late Chief Justice Edward Douglas White—a former United States senator from the Democratic South and a former Confederate soldier—felt it necessary to make a public observation about the work of our highest legal tribunal. At that time there were certain attacks and criticisms being heard, none of a direct nature, to the general effect that the Supreme court followed the majority opinion of the nation's administration. There were likewise veiled charges that the Supreme court attempted to usurp power which was not its own. Strangely, present-day criticisms and attacks have had much the same flavor. To those of that day, Chief Justice White said:

Our Constitution

"No instance is afforded from the beginning of the government where the act which was within a power conferred, was declared to be repugnant to the Constitution because it appeared to the judicial mind that the particular assertion of constitutional power was either unwise or unjust."

You have heard, and no doubt you have read, assertions by unthinking people to the effect that since the court has upheld some New Deal laws unconstitutional, it was simply old-fashioned, out of date, or as Mr. Roosevelt said, its decisions were taking us back to the horse and buggy days." Of course, anyone who has observed the Supreme court; anyone who has studied its precedents and examples; anyone who has considered the soundness of its logic and philosophy, cannot help reaching a conclusion that the Supreme court is now and never has been an agency of government that is susceptible to the effects of rabble rousing or is influenced by suddenly developed waves of public opinion. It has consistently adhered to the principle of interpreting laws and administering justice without regard for the effect of its decisions upon the political plans or aspirations of individuals or groups.

I do not believe that a drive to limit the power of the Supreme court or use it in any other way than as the Constitution's drafters intended will be successful. Many people with whom I have had contact, however, anticipate a fight of serious import. It may be that I wish to see it or it may be that I believe our Constitution is not sufficiently flexible and that we can hardly change the Constitution without losing the power of the Supreme court. However that may be, it does appear that the time has arrived for those who would be Americans and who would have America last as a Republic to be on their guard and to inquire before they vote for members of the house and senate whether those candidates are going to support and defend the Constitution, the Supreme court and the things for which the constitution and court stand in our national life. It is a non-partisan question. It is a non-partisan issue, and I believe it is of as much importance as any question before the American people today.

The importance of this is highly important because of pending cases in the Supreme court. I need only recall to you that cases are before the court for adjudication involving the validity of the Agriculture Adjustment act, the right of the federal government to control labor and employers as it has done in the Guffey Coal bill, the program of government in business as represented by the creation of the Tennessee valley electric layout and the sales of its product in competition with private industry, and four or five others of lesser consequence. I think it is generally agreed that the court will hold some of these legislative policies to be unconstitutional. Certainly, legal opinion is thoroughly divided and some of the lawyers must be right in their guesses as to the court's decrees. In that event, there will be disappointments. Those officials who have sponsored the various programs and projects that are now come into question will suffer because their pride will be hurt. The next step, a result that always obtains, the disappointed ones will attempt to find a goat on whom they can lay the blame. The goat undoubtedly will be the Supreme court but the general reverence held for the court will not permit open attacks upon it. Instead, these disappointed ones will seek to accomplish their purpose in another way, namely, by changes in the Constitution that will curb the power of the court. It will not be the first time that this has been done or that drives against the court have taken place. Proposals to change the power of the court by constitutional amendment or otherwise occurred in 1823, 1826, 1868, in the 1890's and again in 1923. Fortunately, congress rejected those proposals in every instance. It is to be hoped that congress will do it again.

Now, we have a total of four proposals in congress designed to accomplish changes in the power of the court. Probably the most important of these is that by Senator Norris of Nebraska who advocates a constitutional change that would give the Supreme court exclusive power to pass upon constitutional questions of law, and to pass on those questions within six months after enactment of the legislation in question.

On the surface, this would appear to be a meritorious proposition but I have found, in discussing it with men equipped to analyze the proposal, it contains some elements of grave danger. If such a provision were operative at the present time, for instance, it would be easy for some of the brain trust to make it impossible for the court ever to have an opportunity to declare the act constitutional or unconstitutional. The course that was pointed out to me was this: By the expedient of allowing a new law to be inoperative through non-enforcement for a period of six months, its terms could never be brought into question. If the administrative official did not seek to enforce the law and bring violators to the bar of the court within the six-month period the law would go on the statute books until repealed by congress.

Senator Norris likewise has argued that the Supreme court should never be allowed to declare an act unconstitutional unless two-thirds of the nine justices were in agreement in that regard. He has bitterly opposed rulings of the court which were decided on a five to four basis; so it seems the Nebraska senator may have a beautiful theory that could easily go off at a tangent when applied to humans.

Norris' Argument

Most of the other proposals now in congress will get nowhere in congressional consideration and, therefore, reference to them will be omitted. It remains as a possibility, however, that the next election could bring in enough rabble-rousing demagogues to put through resolutions proposing that the Constitution be amended. Of course, those resolutions from congress have to be adopted by the 48 states but it has always been the case that if proposed amendments to the Constitution are checked in congress the major battle has been won.

I do not know, nor do I care to predict, how the farmers of the country will react to a decision by the Supreme court holding AAA unconstitutional. Certainly, they will be disappointed but whether this disappointment will result in a concerted movement by them to amend the Constitution to permit operation of present AAA policies is a question only time can answer. There is this much that can be said, however, and it has no relation to politics: I believe they will regret it if they seek to open up the Constitution to amendments. If they do succeed, they will then find that all of the other interests in this country will be clamoring for changes and the result probably be a muddy mess.

"Deadwood Dick"

"Deadwood Dick" was Richard W. Clarke (1845-1930) and he was a frontiersman of the Black Hills district. Joining a party bound for gold digging in that region, he became a noted character, taking part in the Sioux wars, acting as express guard on stage coaches and aiding United States marshals in suppressing lawlessness. His alliterative name was popularized by dime-novel writers.

Golden Phantoms

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

©W.N.U. By Editha L. Watson

THE LOST CITY

In 1879, near where the town of Aspen, Colo., now stands, a stranger staggered into a ranch house, ill, tired, and crazed from privation.

When he had recovered sufficiently to tell his story, he spoke about the ruins of an old city in Utah, near which were an old fort and a rich mine of gold and silver. The mine, he said, appeared to have been worked centuries before his discovery of the place. He had 20 pounds of ore to back up his story, which he had managed to keep throughout his journey over the broken country.

As soon as he had regained enough health to allow him to travel, the stranger set out again with his load of ore, saying that he intended taking it to Leadville to sell. He expected to devote the proceeds to furnishing a modest outfit, when he would return to his find and work it. But he disappeared from all knowledge when he left the ranch, and was never seen again.

A party was gathered at Meeker to go into the Ute reservation where this mine was supposed to be, and it started out on the trail of the golden phantom. The party was headed by an old prospector who knew something of the country, and this man, as they neared the place where the mine was said to be, decided to go on ahead to scout out the lay of the land. He was gone for some time, and when he returned he had with him two sacks of ore which were from 70 per cent to 80 per cent pure silver and also contained some gold. He came with bad news, however, for the Utes were not feeling hospitable, and the prospector would not lead the party any farther lest they should all be killed.

Later on, this same prospector met a cowboy who claimed to have considerable influence over the Utes. He was persuaded to join this man in a hunt for the lost city treasure, but first he made a map of the country and left it with friends, as he felt uncertain whether he would live to return.

Time went on, and no word came from the prospector or the cowboy. They seemed to have disappeared as completely as had the stranger who started for Leadville with his ore. At last the prospector's friends, who had been keeping his map, decided to go in search for him.

They followed the trail into a desolate country where no human seemed ever to have lived. At last they met an old Ute who appeared to be friendly, and told him that they were hunting for the two men. The Indian understood them, and led them on to the foot of a cliff. Here they found the body of the prospector, who had been shot and thrown off of the height, but no horse nor pack was to be seen. Several miles farther on the old Ute showed them the body of the cowboy, who had also been shot to death, and his outfit stolen.

The two men were buried where they fell. In 1904 the location of those graves was still known, but the site of the mine had never been found. Whether it was an old Spanish working or whether the Indians had taken out the ore was never known. In fact, outside of the knowledge that the place is somewhere near the head of the Grand Canyon, there are no further data to be found regarding this lost mine.

BEHIND THE WALL

In 1906 two men named Murphy and Thomas came into a little town in Sonora, Mexico. They had some ore which they took to the local assayer, an American, for a report. It assayed $60,000 to the ton.

The newcomers said that they had been prospecting up in the mountains to the west, and one day their burros got away. It was while they were hunting the animals that they found a wall of masonry which aroused their curiosity. It seemed very old, and yet was well preserved. Its discoverers thought that there might be something valuable behind such a wall, and accordingly they broke through to investigate.

Crawling into the hole they had made, they found themselves in the mouth of a tunnel. There were peculiar jadeite statuettes and other evidence of ancient tribes in the long-hidden place, but what these men wanted was gold, and it was with a vast thrill of joy that they found, at the end of some 150 feet, a two foot vein of the yellow metal in the breast of the tunnel.

The assayer heard their story with great interest. Then he proposed that the partners let him in on their mine. It was Yaqui country, and three men would be stronger than two. Then, his greater knowledge of ores and minerals would also serve them well. He was able to convince Murphy and Thomas, that they needed him as a third partner, and they agreed to take him back with them.

Two days later they started for the mine. On the way, the Yaquis ambushed the trio, and the two prospectors were killed. The assayer escaped, but he had not found out where to search for the ancient wall, and its location remains a secret down to this day.

What Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The Cultural Expansion

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—What a war it has been for education.

They were savages, ruthless and very ignorant. But now they know about the armored tank and the screaming shell and the admirable flame-thrower which cooks the flesh on the living bone. They were isolated. Dat ole long-distauce gun, she sho' kin find you wharever you's at; all she wants is you' home address. They had barbaric pride— 'twas the breath in their black nostrils — but poison gas would be the cure for that foolishness. Like foxes, they den in the earth. The scout plane spies on them and the bomber plane comes and makes scrap of their bodies. Like lions, the naked spearsmen advance; the machine gun levels the ranks down flat. Like moles, the fugitives burrow under the mud walls. So, with his high explosives, the white man blasts them out.

Irvin S. Cobb.

Verily, there is no excusing any race, however remote, however backward, for failure to share in the cultural beauties of this modern civilization.

Joe Robinson's Elegance

SENATOR Joe Robinson, somewhere in Arkansaw, Dear Sen.—I hear some of the boys are agin you for re-election because you've been guilty of spats in the first degree. If your home-folks predicate fitness for office on ruggedness of feet, Primo Carnera is their man. But if they want brains at the other end to balance the load, I insist you've got the credentials.

I know how you've suffered. You put on spats, and, just about the time you quit being self-conscious, the weather turns warm on you.

Still, a more tolerant day is dawning. Why, the first time I wore spats in Paducah, I needed police protection. It was a good thing for me I wasn't a Yankee. And on down in the tall timber my wrist-watch was mistaken for a handcuff with a time-lock on it. I reckon they thought I was a fugitive from a Vassar daisy chain.

Now, just around every corner is a service station, a beauty parlor or a country club. And that, mind you, where once, when a boy came of age, they had to run him down with dogs to put pants on him.

So cheer up, Sen. At least they didn't prove a monocle on you. Yours sympathetically, Cobb.

A Week of Peace

TO THE sentimentalists amongst us, the peril of the moment is that we may run out of these something-or-other weeks. You know, weeks dedicated to hay fever or sanitary plumbing or ankle-length union suits or anemic Armenians. You see, we only have 52 weeks to start with.

The surest way to spoil a good thing is to overdo it. That also goes for salad dressings, four-plus pants, rice pudding and the young thing who puts so much make-up on her eye lashes she looks as though she were peeping out through two buttonholes in an old plush vest. Any party could gain a lot of votes by inserting a plank in its platform calling for just one plain, old-fashioned week starting without excitement on a Monday and ending very quietly the following Sunday.

Tugwell and Native Sons

UNTIL he hauled off and made that speech recently, Professor Tugwell was leading the brain trust with the title of Chief Lobe. He may still be that, but just the same, if I were Tugwell, I believe I'd follow the advice which the fire department prints on the theater programs: "Look about you now and choose the nearest exit."

Speaking of vanishing species, whatever became of the pedestrian classes in America—you know, people who went places by the quaint old-fashioned process called walking? Today the population seems exclusively to be made up of two major groups—those with cars who are riding and those with thumbs who crave to do so.

And, speaking of traveling, I've discovered what, in the modern sense of the term, is a true California native son. A native son is a fellow who has been here long enough to sell his trailer.

Two Promising Actors

MY BUDDING ambition to turn actor has had a boost. A young fellow, who, I predict, will yet get somewhere in this business if he keeps on trying, was over here, and, after dinner, this party, whose name is Charles Chaplin, gave an imitation of a buzzard lighting alongside a sick horse. Such judges as Claudette Colbert and Edna May Oliver agreed that, as a buzzard, he would fool any living creature, except possibly another buzzard.

But talk about acting, now. By special request I played the principal supporting role, that of the horse, and the sheer artistry of the performance gave delight to one and all. So now I'm convinced my future is assured, if only we can get somebody to write a show with a part in it for a sick horse.

HONOR DEAD BY BURNING MONEY

Village in Indo-China Does Thriving Business Supplying Funerals.

The world depression has not dimmed in the slightest degree the prosperity of the little village of Langbuoi, in French Indo-China, the inhabitants of which continue to turn out paper money by the ton to be burned at funerals so the deceased will have plenty of money in the next world.

Dard Hunter, one of the leading authorities in this country on the art of papermaking, would not however, recommend the same panacea for the United States prosperity, he said on his return after a four months' journey to the Far East.

Mr. Hunter, whose contributions to the art of papermaking have won him the title of "the modern Gutenberg" and the gold medal of the American Institute of Graphic Arts, went to Langbuoi because he had heard that its inhabitants were operating the oldest paper mill in the world. He reported that the Langbuoi villagers were carrying on the craft of papermaking which their ancestors first began on the same site about 700 years ago.

"Their papermaking methods are very primitive and crude," Mr. Hunter explained. "Apparently, they have not changed in any marked degree since the invention of paper away back in 150 A. D. The product turned out by the villagers of Langbuoi is pretty terrible stuff. However, they are satisfied with it and don't seem to be able to turn out enough of the spirit money, for which there is a great demand all through Indo-China."

About 400 men, women and children live in Langbuoi, which is a thatched-roof settlement along a mud trail on the edge of the jungle fifteen miles north of Hanoi. All the inhabitants work on some phase of papermaking. But the best craftsmanship and the chief energies of the villagers are devoted to the production of spirit money.

There are two principal varieties of this money. One kind consists of ordinary perforated paper; this is used at the funerals of ordinary citizens, who, it is believed, will have no great need of large funds in heaven. A special brand of spirit money, artfully decorated with lavish illustrations of gods, is burned at the funeral of the "aristocrats" of Indo-China. The "aristocratic" brand of spirit money is in high denominations. It burns with a heavy, acrid smoke, which floats lazily toward the blue skies, but eventually manages to reach the departed aristocrat in heaven, according to the firm belief of the Indo-Chinese priests.

The paper mills of Langbuoi are probably the most remote and inaccessible in the world, Mr. Hunter said. In spite of this, Langbuoi is the chief source of paper for all Indo-China. The daily output averages about 100 reams of 500 sheets each—almost all of which consists of spirit money.

Bamboo fibers, plentiful in the near-by jungles, are the source of Langbuoi's paper. The bamboo is cut and then boiled in lime. Then it is washed in a stream meandering through the village and beaten by hand until it becomes pulp. The pulp is placed next in a wooden vat containing water. When a screen of bamboo reeds is dipped in this vat the bamboo fibers cling to the screen. These fibers are removed and made into the famous Langbuoi paper.

Two cases filled with Langbuoi spirit money were among Mr. Hunter's luggage. Some of this money will be used to illustrate a book—his fifteenth—which Mr. Hunter will write on the origin and history of papermaking. The rest will go to the Smithsonian institution and other museums.

Porters Who Shoulder Burden of Half a Ton

To become a porter in the Central Markets of Paris one must pass drastic weight-carrying tests. One such is to walk the whole length of the market carrying at least 400 pounds on the back. Would-be porters must show also that they are capable of carrying, for a shorter distance, half an ox, weighing about 500 pounds. The knack of balancing various kinds of burdens has to be painstakingly acquired. Several of the star porters can carry 600 pounds—more than a quarter of a ton. Standing still, some of them can hold across their shoulders a burden of half a ton.—Pearson's Weekly.

Farmer Makes Home of Tomb, Fears Only Rats

Back in 1880, Linus Smith designed and built a mausoleum near Medina, Ohio, to hold the bodies of his entire family. But only the remains of Smith's father, mother and younger brother ever were placed in this tomb. Soon after the body of the younger Smith was placed in the vault, the door at the entrance was broken down and the body stolen. An unsigned note offered return of it for $200. A neighbor youth was suspected, confessed the ghoulish act and returned the body. This occurrence turned Linus Smith against mausoleums and he transferred all three bodies to a cemetery. The vault, empty for years, now is occupied by Charles Ritter, bachelor farmer, who finds it quite a desirable place in which to live, cool in summer and warm in winter.

A chimney was built and a stove installed which Ritter uses for cooking and what heat he needs in winter. Ritter says he doesn't fear ghosts nearly as much as rats that like to share his strange home with him.—Capper's Weekly.

Busy Then as Now

Each photograph in the senior album for Harvard's class of 1904 is accompanied by a sketch of the subject's undergraduate activities. Under one picture, however, there is only the subject's name. The name is Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was explained that the sketches customarily are supplied by students themselves, and that the man who is now President of the United States apparently was too busy to write his.

LIVESTOCK FARMS FACE THE WINTER WATER PROBLEM

When water becomes short during a drouth farmers will haul it for miles to keep their stock from suffering with thirst, but some farmers give little thought to winter watering of live stock—an unpleasant task and a difficult management problem.

Here is what Iowa State College animal husbandrymen have to suggest to aid farmers in getting their stock though the winter in tip-top condition.

"A hen's beak was not made for an ice pick," declares N. F. Waters, of the Poultry Husbandry department. He says that if the water in the poultry house is renewed often enough to keep it from freezing, Iowa flocks will get all the water they need. An electric or oil lamp device placed either under or in the water fountain will prevent the water from freezing, but the water must be kept fresh. An ordinary 12 quart pail set in a frame is the best fountain for Iowa farm conditions. Laying hens needs plenty of water, because the egg is largely composed of water.

80 to 150 Pounds Water Per Cow

The average producing cow needs from 80 to 150 pounds of water daily, states E. N. Hansen of the Dairy Husbandry department. Experiments show that it takes approximately 4 pounds of water to produce 1 pound of milk, making it important that the dairy cow have frequent access to fresh water.

Succulent feed such as silage will produce about one-third of the needed water. The inside bowl is the best means of providing water for the dairy herd. The barn must be warm enough to keep the water from freezing. The outside water tank is the next best method—if it has a heater. The cows should be turned out to drink oftener than the traditional two times a day, if best production is expected. Water can be a limiting factor as well as improper feeding.

Tanks Must Be Open

An automatic waterer, consisting of a circular 50-gallon tank with a oil heater arrangement underneath to prevent the water from freezing is the best method of furnishing water to pigs, says C. C. Culbertson chief of animal feeding.

Tests conducted at the college show that pigs watered at this fountain made greater gains than those watered from an outside trough that was frozen over much of the time. The most important thing, however, in watering pigs is to have the fountain free from ice at all times and located close to the hog house.

Beef cattle, horses, and sheep do not need as much water as other stock, but they should not be expected to drink their fill if the tank is frozen.

Thanksgiving Ode

Once more the liberal year laughs out
O'er richer stores than gems of gold;
Once more with harvest-song and shout
Is nature's bloodless triumph told.

Our common mother rests and sings,
Like Ruth, among the garnered sheaves;
Her lap is full of goodly things,
Her brow is bright with Autumn leaves.

O, favors every year made new!
O, gifts with rain and sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due;
The fullness shames our discontent.

We shut our eyes, and flowers bloom on;
We murmur, but the corn-ears fill;
We choose the shadow, but the sun
That casts it shines behind us still.

God gives us with our rugged soil
The power to make it Eden-fair,
And richer fruits to crown our toil
Than summer-wedded islands bear.

Who murmurs at his lot today?
Who scorns his native fruit from bloom?
Or sighs for dainties far away,
Besides the bounteous board of home?

Thank Heaven, instead, that Freedom's arm
Can change a rocky soil to gold;
That brave and generous lives can warm
A clime with Northern ices cold.

And let these altars, wreathed with flowers,
And piled with fruits, awake again
Thanksgiving for the golden hours,
The early and the latter rain!

Shamrocks Win Two In Games With Ventura High

ALUMNI TEAMS WON THREE GAMES TUESDAY EVE

A large crowd was present at the school gym Tuesday night to witness the annual Alumni-High school games, and were rewarded by three close battles that kept spectators on their feet most of the time.

In the evening's curtain raiser the Alumni Seconds defeated the high school seconds 21 to 17.

A feature attraction of the evening was the game between the high school and Alumni girls. The green high school team made a splendid showing against their more experienced opponents, who won 19 to 14.

The final game of the night was a close hard-fought battle beween the high school varsity and the Alumni regulars. The Shamrocks led 17 to 14 at the half, but the old grads came back to tie the score and the outcome of the game was in doubt until the final whistle, with the Alumni winning 25 to 23.

Thanksgiving

ENTER into His gates with thanksgiving, and into His courts with praise: and be thankful unto Him and bless His name. For the Lord is good; His mercy is everlasting; and His truth endureth to all generations.

Psalm 100, 4-5

THANKSGIVING day is more interwoven with the nation's history than any other American holiday and has had the most checkered career of them all, a historical review of the long chain of circumstances surrounding this most pleasant harvest festival reveals.

While Thanksgiving, as an annual event under the auspices of the state, is a legacy from the early New England colonists, it nevertheless was first proclaimed as a national day for giving thanks by the first President, George Washington, who was requested to do so by joint resolution of congress in 1789, writes Gifford Ernest in the Chicago Dally News.

At intervals from then on to the present it has been observed nationally by proclamation of the President. The longest interval during which no proclamation was issued and the day was only observed by some and that sectionally, was about 50 years ago.

This hiatus in official national gratitude occured between the presidencies of James Madison and Abraham Lincoln.

During this lapse the southern states objected to its observance by presidential proclamation on the ground that it was a relic of Puritan bigotry. During this long period of supremacy of the South and West in national affairs the festival was confined chiefly to the uortheastern states.

Thursday has been most generally selected as the day of the week for observing the holiday. However, Wednesday has been occasionally used. Although November has been preferred as the month for expressing publicly the national gratitude, February, April, May, August and December have been designated at times.

Wednesdays and Thursdays were selected by the Puritans of New England for their festive occasions in connection with giving thanks for abundant harvests because they desired to have them as far as possible from the Christian Sabbath, which they observed with strict simplicity.

The turkey typifies Thanksgiving viands because Governor Bradford of Plymouth sent out four hunters to procure a supply of game for the feast after the first harvest in the fall of 1621. Conspicuous among the game birds and animals bagged by the hunters were numerous wild turkeys, which were common in the woods of Massachusetts. From this circumstance arose the popular association of these handsome and tasty birds with Thanksgiving.

In time the day was observed in Connecticut; later the Dutch of New Netherland proclaimed a public day for giving thanks. During the Revolutionary war congress recommended days for Thanksgiving. Thursday, November 26, 1789, was proclaimed by President George Washington the first national Thanksgiving day after the setting up of the republic.

After President Adams' proclamation for the observance of April 25, 1799, another one wasn't issued for 13 years, when President Madison revived the day and designated a Thursday in August, 1812, as the day for Thanksgiving. Two other such days were appointed and then the lapse until President Lincoln set aside Thursday, August 6, 1863, as a day of Thanksgiving, and then later in the same year designated the "last Thursday of November next" for the same purpose.

President Lincoln's proclamation was as follows:

Tha year that is drawing toward its close has been filled with tha blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies. To these bounties, which are so constantly enjoyed that wa are prone to forget tha source from which they come, others have been added, which are of so extraordinary a nature that they cannot fail to penetrate and soften the heart which is habitually insensible to the ever-watchful providence of almighty God.

In the midst of a civil war of unequaled magnitude and severity, which has sometimes seemed to foreign states to invite and provoke their aggressions, peace has been preserved with all nations, order has been maintained, the laws have been respected and obeyed, and harmony has prevailed everywhere, except in the theater of military conflict; while that theater has been greatly contracted by the advancing armies and navies of the Union.

Needful diversions of wealth and of strength from the fields of peaceful industry to the national defense have not arrested the plow, the shuttle, or the ship; the ax has enlarged the borders of our settlements, and the mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals, have yielded even more abundantly than heretofore. Population has steadily increased, notwithstanding the waste that has been made in the camp, the siege, and the battlefield, and the country, rejoicing in the consciousness of augmented strength and vigor, is permitted to expect continuance of years with large increase of freedom.

No human counsel hath devised, nor hath any mortal hand worked out these great things. They are the gracious gifts of the most high God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, hath nevertheless remembered mercy.

It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently and gratefully acknowledged as with one heart and one voice by the whole American people. I do, therefore, invite my fellow-citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next as a day of Thanksgiving and praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the heavens. And I recommend to them that, while offering up the ascriptions justly due to him for signal deliverances and blessings, they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to his tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners, or sufferers in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged, and fervently implore the interposition of the almighty hand to heal the wounds of the nation, and to restore it, as soon as may be consistent with the Divine purposes, to the full enjoyment of peace, harmony, tranquility and union.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this third day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the independence of the United States the eighty-eighth.

A. LINCOLN

By the President: WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

President Andrew Johnson in his first Thanksgiving proclamation departed from the precedent of Washington and Lincoln and designated the first Thursday of December, 1865. The following year he returned to the last Thursday of November and all his successors have followed suit.

THERE probably has been no subject since man's beginning more discussed than prayer. Religionists have claimed it belonged to the spiritual world as a form of worship. Scientists not being able to classify it into formula or fact have dismissed the subject as not belonging to the scientific world. What is prayer, and where does it belong, and to whom?

According to the present status of the human race there are three kinds of prayer. The first type of prayer is petition. Begging for something which one has not, whether it be for something to have or to be, it is asking God to give. This type of request is pseudo-prayer, and should bear the name of petition. The second type of prayer is the kind that brings our nation, at the President's proclamation, to its knees on Thanksgiving day in gratitude, for Thanksgiving means gratitude. It is an attribute of the heart. Even though grateful, one can also be selfish. Gratitude is sometimes lacking in human beings and found in dogs. Today, we the American people are not as grateful for our splendid country, with its privileges of free education, its noble liberty of religious thinking, its art, fine music and literature, as were those first Pilgrim fathers who dared the bleak barren coast of early New England.

"Give us this day our daily bread," is more often "said" than prayed; and in how many American homes today do little children never hear a word of grace or gratitude at the beginning of a meal. This is short measure of his rightful heritage. Gratitude is one of the courtesies of character, an amenity of the heart. It can be cultivated by always comparing your lot in life with that of someone who has less rather than more than you have. This always brings gratitude plus contentment. However, this second type of prayer goes only half way to the heart of God, and should only bear the name of gratitude, not prayer.

The third kind of prayer must include others if we wish it to ascend higher than our heads. A great and fine woman, internationally known, said to me once, that she prays God to help her answer prayers of others. "You would be surprised," she said to me, "how many opportunities daily come to me to answer the prayers of other folks. Somehow, when I am thinking in terms of the needs of others I lose track of my own, and I grow strong when others need me to be strong." Can we really pray?

ANNUAL REMINDER

THANKSGIVING day comes as an annual reminder that there is always something for which to be grateful, even if its discernment requires close observation and superior intelligence.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—One of the New Deal policies about which there is an ever increasing complaint is its wanton destruction of the civil service. It used to be said, under Democratic and Republican administrations alike, that it was next to impossible to get a government job except through examinations conducted by the Civil Service commission. That is, there were few appointments available other than under civil service below the rank of Presidential selection. Now, the scene has changed to such an extent that there is little chance to get in the government through civil service and the bulk of the appointments therefore are of a purely politically-indorsed character.

Ignore Civil Service

I do not mean to say that the Civil Service commission has shut up shop, although it has been virtually dehorned, but I do emphasize that as of September 30—the latest pay roll figures for the government—the number of civil service workers was only slightly more than half of the total on the government pay roll exclusive of the army, navy and Marine corps and Civilian Conservation corps.

The Civil Service commission continues to issue its monthy statements on the government personnel but they are becoming increasingly less reliable because one of the most difficult things to get in Washington these days is the accurate figure on the number of workers employed by Uncle Sam. The commission records are complete as far as they go but they fail to go far enough. At this time, for example, the Civil Service commission reports that the government pay roll covers 794,467 employees. That figure, however, does not include the vast army of employees of the Agricultural Adjustment administration who are scattered in every county in the nation. I have heard estimates that the number of these county chairmen, inspectors, investigators, etc., exceeds 110,000 but whether that is too large or too small I cannot be sure for the reason that there is no way by which the number can be checked. Similarly, it is next to impossible to ascertain the number of workers in some of the newer agencies, created under the guise of emergency conditions, because they too are scattered far and wide but the fact remains that the personnel of the government has been expanded more rapidly than ever in history and to the highest recorded peak even for war time.

Personnel Increases

The number of employees on June 30 was given by the commission as 719,440 from which it will be seen there has been an increase of more than 75,000 in three months. That is, there has been that much of an increase for which the commission has records, but again it must be remarked that the commission has no way of compelling some of the alphabetical agencies to supply it regularly with the number of employees on their pay rolls.

The number of federal employees aside from the military services when Mr. Roosevelt took office was approximately 585,000. The number of employees on the federal pay roll when Mr. Coolidge retired and Mr. Hoover became President was roughly 545,000. From these the enormous growth of the government bureaucracy is at least hinted if not demonstrated fully.

Then, there are more yet to come. Several new agencies were created under acts of the last congress and others have since been created by executive order of the President. Take the Rural Rehabilitation administration, for example. Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, who used to be brain truster No. 1, has a fund of $250,000,000 with which to play and obviously Mr. Tugwell will need a great staff to assist him. The National Youth administration is another new one. It will not have as much money as Mr. Tugwell but it is starting its operation with $50,000,000—and that is quite a chunk of money to most of us. The National Labor board is hardly organized yet and the Social Security board has just begun to arrange a setup. Likewise the board to administer the Guffey coal law—a little NRA for the soft coal industry—has been appointed and is operating with only a few clerks. It cannot get along without a sizable corps of inspectors and examiners and investigators. It will have to have an extensive research staff in order that it can be supplied at all times with whatever facts and figures it needs or wants. So it goes on through the list almost unending.

One newspaper columnist had the audacity to say in his column the other day that if Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins really wants to solve the unemployment problem he ought to turn his attention to the government itself. At the rate of expansion, the government probably could be made to absorb the 3,500,000 unemployed to whom Mr. Hopkins was preparing to give work by December 1.

Where's the Jobs?

December 1 is hereabouts. But Mr. Hopkins has not succeeded in his much publicized plan to give all of the 3,500,000 unemployed workers jobs. He was doomed to failure from the start. He announced, it will be remembered, that all federal relief was to end on November 1, by which time he figured that made-work would be available for the 3,500,000. This figure was the topmost limit for which the federal government was to be responsible. The states and municipalities were to take care of the remainder of roughly 5,000,000 who had to have help.

November 1 came along and Mr. Hopkins changed the date to December 1 He did this after consultation with the President who announced with considerable emphasis that he meant just what he said and that federal relief was going to stop as of December 1. But it seems the machinery was too ponderous to get in motion in time to absorb all of these workers. Most folks recognized it weeks ago but Mr. Hopkins steadfastly clung to his dream and that dream, like so many others, was dissipated in the thin air and sank almost without trace.

Serious Problem

On top of this Hopkins failure has come a serious problem. It is serious for the administration not only because of the fact that winter is coming on and people must be fed and clothed but it is delicate from the political standpoint. In the last few weeks a considerable number of complaints have reached Washington officials from those who were provided with work. They contend that the government wage rate is insufficient to meet their needs. This results from the increased cost of living—higher prices for food and clothing and the other necessaries of life.

The administration is being blamed for this condition. Opponents of the New Deal are capitalizing this discontent. They are saying to the folks who find the wages too small that they have been made the victim of New Deal policies, such as tampering with the currency, nationalizing silver, paying bounties for reduced production on the farms and the like.

The upshot of the situation is that not only those on made-work who are paid by the government and those who are on legitimate pay rolls of industry are becoming thoroughly dissatisfied. They are demanding more money. I do not believe anyone can forecast what will happen. One thing is certain. If industry must increase wages, consumers will have to pay the price. There will be further increases in the things we all buy in event higher wages are obtained from commerce and industry. And, if the government raises wages to those on made-work, the drain on the treasury will be correspondingly faster. The taxpayer has to pay this. So all in all there is a difficult problem to be solved by the President and his relief advisers.

It's Some Big Job

Few of us ever stop to think what a job it is to maintain the supply of money in circulation. Omitting any consideration of the paper currency which keeps the gigantic bureau of printing and engraving operating 24 hours each day and considering only the coins that jingle, it requires the operation of two or three great plants to mint our money.

The bureau of the mint in the treasury gave out some figures the other day that seem to me to be most interesting. They are interesting because of their size. On the basis of these figures, it is calculated that there are actually in the pockets of the American people the following number of coins, each figure being an approximation: 1,000,000,000 dimes, 1,400,000,000 nickels, 5,500,000,000 pennies, 400,000,000 quarters, 200,000,000 half dollars and approximately 33,000,000 silver dollars.

These figures furnish an interesting commentary as well on our present modes of living. They supply a sidelight on our system of taxation which calls for pennies, nickels and dimes here, there and everywhere as a result of sales taxes. Besides, transportation systems like the street cars call for an exceptionally large quantity of the minor coins like nickels and dimes. One could enumerate a score of factors in modern life that compel each of us to carry and use these small coins.

The mint bureau is authority also for the information that even this stupendous sum of minor coins seems insufficient. The mints, accordingly, have been speeded up and they are now working at a rate almost double that of 1934. How much further they will have to expand cannot be foretold, but as an innocent bystander, I fear that if I have to carry coins in any greater number than I have had them loaded in my pockets, it is going to mean new business for the tailors. They will have steady work replacing trouser pockets.

Discipline of Seamen

Danger at sea may bring out either the best or the worst traits of human nature. Nothing can be more inspiring than the general discipline and courage shown on shipboard in most emergencies; nothing more sickening than the manifestation of panic in exceptional cases. In this respect a great responsibility devolves upon the commander. It is he who sets the example for both crew and passengers.

Sanctions Against Italy Now in Effect

SOMETHING new under the sun is now being tried out—an economic war to put a stop to a military war. Fifty-two nations are united in the imposition of sanctions against Italy, which became an outlaw nation on November 18 by decree of the League of Nations. Four league nations, all unimportant, refused to participate. They are Austria, Hungary, Albania and Paraguay. Indirect support is given the league by two non-member nations, the United States and Germany. Nearly all the world's chief ports are closed to Italian goods, and exports to Italy of arms, war materials and a long list of key products has stopped. Loans and credits for the Italian government, public bodies, corporations and individuals are forbidden.

Gen. Badoglio

Should this momentous action succeed, it would seem that the end of Benito Mussolini and the Fascist regime in Italy is in sight. Should it fail, the League of Nations fails, the British communications in the Mediterranean would be threatened, and the peace of the world would be menaced.

Standing steadfast against the sanctions, Premier Mussolini proclaimed the day on which they were established "a day of ignominy and iniquity," as had been declared by the Fascist grand council. The day was made a holiday, flags flew from all buildings and there were numerous angry demonstrations against the member nations of the league. The frontiers of Italy and its ports were closed to goods of those nations except for certain necessities. Restrictions of food, fuel and light were put in force.

As for the Ethiopian war itself, Mussolini announced an important change in commanders. Gen. Emilio de Bono was recalled with warm praise for having achieved his mission "under extremely difficult circumstances" and was to be elevated to the rank of marshal. Gen. Pietro Badoglio, chief of staff, was appointed to succeed De Bono as commander in chief of the invading armies.

The Italian forces in northern Ethiopia were preparing for a new forward movement, their objective being Amba Alaji, 40 miles south of Makale. It was learned that Emperor Haile Selassie had sent to his men in that region an order not to retreat further, so there were prospects of a real battle. Ten thousand well trained and well armed warriors from the rich province of Walega arrived at Addis Ababa to fight the Italians.

Treaty With Canada Is Made Public

AMERICAN business generally is pleased with the terms of the new trade treaty with Canada, made public simultaneously in Washington and Ottawa. Farmers and the lumber men of the northwest will not like it. High tariff advocates in congress are sure to attack the pact, but its terms cannot be affected for three years, even were congress to repeal the reciprocal trade act under which President Roosevelt acted in negotiating the agreement. It is considered a trade agreement rather than a formal treaty, and goes into effect January 1 next.

Government officials, foreseeing adverse reaction in some quarters because of some of the sliced American duties, sought to show the pact would lead to greatly increased trade and employment which would benefit the country.

President Roosevelt stressed that while duties were lowered on Canadian cattle, cream, seed potatoes and certain kind of lumber, quotas placed on these articles would prevent serious interference with the American market.

An analysis of the pact shows that the United States grants concessions to Canada on 79 major commodities, including:

Tariff slash on four-year-old whisky from $1 to 50 cents per fifth of a gallon.

Reductions in duties on specified quotas of beef cattle (from 3 to 2 cents per pound on animals over 700 pounds); dairy cows (2½ to 1½ cents); cream (56.6 cents to 35 cents per gallon); white or Irish seed potatoes (75 to 45 cents per 100 pounds); Douglas fir and western hemlock (50 per cent).

Reduced duties on lumber and timber of other kinds; cheddar cheese, turnips, apples, hay, maple sugar, live poultry, horses, halibut and some other fish; some leathers and ferro-manganese.

A pledge to keep on the free list Canadian pulpwood, newsprint, unmanufactured wood, shingles, lath, lobsters, certain furs, crude asbestos, artificial abrasives and fertilizers.

A promise to maintain the present 10 per cent duty on feedstuffs for animals.

On the part of Canada the duties are cut on 180 commodities, some of the leading concessions being: Reductions on wheat (from 30 to 12 cents a bushel); off-season fresh vegetables (50 per cent); vegetables imported in marketing season (35 per cent); most classes of farm machinery (50 per cent); industrial machinery (35 to 25 per cent); mining and textile machinery; radios (30 to 25 per cent); electric refrigerators; tinplate manufactures; dressed lumber; building materials; motor vehicles; cotton fabrics, furs, chemicals, silk fabrics, cotton manufactures, electrical apparatus.

Also rate cuts on oranges, grapefruit, nuts, iron and steel manufactures.

Place magazines and potatoes on the free list.

A pledge to grant the United States, on 767 articles, the lowest rates paid by any non-British country.

A promise to seek legislation to permit Canadians visiting the United States to carry $100 in American goods duty free back to their homes each month.

A pledge to liberalize the system of establishing arbitrary valuations on American products.

A promise to keep raw cotton on the free list and to put tractors on that list.

United States Will Not Interfere in Mexico

REQUESTS made by the Knights of Columbus that the United States government make an investigation of alleged religious persecution in Mexico have been denied by President Roosevelt in a rather sharply worded letter to Supreme Knight Martin H. Carmody. Mr. Roosevelt said:

"I decline to permit this government to undertake a policy of interference in the domestic concerns of foreign governments and thereby jeopardize the maintenance of peaceful conditions".

Baldwin's Government Wins Elections

PRIME MINISTER STANLEY BALDWIN and his Conservative government party won an impressive victory in the British parliamentary elections, although the Laborites succeeded in decreasing the Conservative majority in the house by about 60 seats. Baldwin himself was unopposed for re-election, but Ramsay MacDonald, lord president of the council and former prime minister, was badly defeated, as was his son, Malcolm, who has been minister of colonies. The elder MacDonald left the Labor party to form the national government, and the Laborites had been after his scalp ever since. The government party will have a majority of about 250 in the next house of commons.

Stanley Baldwin

"It was a splendid result," Baldwin said in a statement. "The country has renewed its support of the national government. It has expressed decisively its confidence in our will and ability to continue our work for national restoration and world peace."

The newly elected members of parliament meet at Westminster on November 26 to take their oath of allegiance to the crown. This procedure will occupy three days after which commons will adjourn until December 3 when King George will open the new parliament.

Clash in North China Is Imminent

WITH everything prepared for the proclamation of autonomy of North China, there was almost the certainty of serious fighting in that region between the troops of the Chinese National government and the forces of autonomy movement leaders. It was reported in Tokyo that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, virtual dictator of the National government, had mobilized 300,000 soldiers in the northern provinces, chiefly along the Lunghai railroad in Shantung. The Japanese officials would not say what action Japan might take if Chiang Kai-shek should move his forces farther northward, but they admitted there probably would be a serious battle.

Shanghai heard that several Japanese troop ships had reached Taku, 27 miles southeast of Tientsin, to block the approaches to that city. Japanese forces already were massed at Shanhaikwan, main gateway to northern China at the east end of the great wall.

Farm Mortgage Amendment Is Declared Illegal

LEGISLATION designed to replace the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act after that law was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme court, was itself declared illegal by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago.

The judges found, in effect, that the amendment adopted in August of 1935, reducing the moratorium period from five to three years, exceeded the powers of congress as did the original measure invalidated last May.

Possession Demands Our Service, Lest We Perish

The only hope of perfecting human relationship is in accordance with the law of service under which men are so solicitous about what they shall give. Yet people are entitled to the rewards of their industry. What they earn is theirs, no matter how small or how great. But the possession of property carries the obligation to use it in a larger service.

For a man not to recognize the truth, not to be obedient to law, to render allegiance to the state, is for him to be at war with his own nature, to commit suicide. That is why "the wages of sin is death." Unless we live rationally, we perish physically, naturally, spiritually.

A Law Every Mother Should Know and Observe

Never Give Your Child An Unknown Remedy without Asking Your Doctor First

According to any doctor you ask, the only safe way is never to give your child a remedy you don't know all about, without asking him first.

When it comes to "milk of magnesia," that you know everywhere, for over 60 years, doctors have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia for your child."

So—always say Phillips' when you buy. And, for your own peace of mind, see that your child gets this; the finest now known.

Safety for You and Yours

You can assist others by refusing to accept a substitute for the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Do this in the interest of yourself and your children—and in the interest of the public in general.

Mrs. H. J. Stille will have a sale next week, starting Monday, Dec. 2nd. Sale will be at the home of Grandma Haefner, first house north of Frank Gruetzmacher's sore. Mrs. Stille is totally blind and wishes to sell articles she learned to make at the school for the blind at Vinton.

There will be several small baskets, hand woven, and sets of mats in beautiful soft colors, useful as dresser sets, buffet sets, hot dish pads and many other things. There will also be larger mats, that make beautiful pillow tops, throws for stuffed furniture and covers for tables or stands.. Nothing will cost over a dollar.

Mrs. Stille invites all who are interested to come and visit with her and look these things over. They make fine gifts.

---At The Linotype

By ETAOIN SHRDLU

Last week's question in the "Did You Know?" feature of the Squealer awakened our curiosity and we searched the files of the Times for the write-up of the first basketball game played by a team representing Klemme high school.

'Way, 'way back in the files of the year 1921 we found that the Local school joined the Iowa high school athletic association. That winter Klemme played a schedule of ten games against Rowan, Goodell, Crystal Lake, Ventura, Belmond and Garner. The season evidently started on Christmas eve as the first game on the schedule was at Rowan, December 24th.

Local games were played in the Olaf M. Twedt garage, the building now occupied by the Klemme Auto Company.

Members of the boys team were:
R. F. George Bergman
S. F. Milvern Ell
C. Adolph Lauritzen
R. G. Gerald Koerner
S. G. Howard Wiles

Other members of the team were Donald Stille and Fred Schlichting.

Perhaps you were puzzled by that "S. F." and "S. G.". Well, in those days players were designated as Standing Forwards and Running Forwards; and the guards were spoken of the same way.

But don't think for a minute that the boys had the only team in the school. The girls organized a team and played the same schools as the boys. Their lineup included:
F. Glenna Gruetzmacher
F. Pearl Johnson
J. C. Marie Blank
R. C. Maybelle Johnson
G. Neota Ridder
G. Leona Lau

Other players were Bernice Tanner, Adella Schroeder, Faith Ax and Vona Greene.

The teams were coached by the professor H. T. Wilson. Each team had a record of foun wins and six losses that year, an exceedingly good record for their first year of competition.

A Reply To The President's Letter

Several weeks ago President Roosevelt addressed a letter to the clergy of the country asking for suggestion which could be used for his guidance in administering the affairs of the nation. We reprint here an excerpt from the reply of Rev. S. R. Ferguson of Cedar Rapids.

—o o—

"I find cause for concern in the attitude of the administration toward the respectable middle class of citizens, who have followed the American tradition of thrift...Many of them have invested their savings in business enterprises, such as utility companies, most of which, in spite of your belief to the contrary, are honestly conducted.

"Your administration has seriously threatened to destroy confidence in these organizations, thereby imperiling the savings of a multitude of our people. To destroy the savings of people on one hand and with the other to advocate a social security law to safeguard citizens in old age, appears difficult for the average citizen to reconcile..."

—o o—

We believe the large majority of substantial citizens feel as does Dr. Ferguson, but we are glad to have and reprint a definite expression from a man of his standing and calling.

FOR THE THINGS YOU CAN NOT GET AT HOME

Your Thanksgiving Dining Room

Of course the table will look attractive with the china and beautiful silver. And the plump turkey with all the dressings and all those "fixings" which so delight the heart. You have planned all of these, of course!

But what about the furniture? Is the side board old and shabby? Does the table creak? Are the chairs a wee bit rickety? Above all, are there enough of them?

This is a Thanskgiving reminder, when your mind is so full of various things that these thoughts may have escaped you. We believe you will be very much interested in one of the attractive dining room suites that we have—very moderately priced.

Is the Expensive Wife Loved Most?

Ideal Mate One Who Creates Happiness at Not Too Great a Cost.

"I have just learned that in the Belgian Congo, where wives are purchased, a man is afraid to purchase a wife at a bargain price, that is below the prevailing rate, because she will afterwards reproach him with not loving her as he paid so little for her.

"There don't seem to be any individual problems any more. At any rate, here's one we share with the women of the Belgian Congo. From my observation of selfish, extravagant women who keep their husbands' noses to the grindstone, and then others who try to be real partners and helpmeets, I have many times been ready to conclude that men do indeed value their wives, not according to what those wives do for them, but according to what they cost them. The more expensive they are the more they love them.

"What do you think about it?"

The above query was received by a woman-writer of note, who answers as follows:

We have all seen cases in point of our reader's argument. We have seen women who apparently gave nothing and got everything; women whose first, second and last thought was of themselves, not only indulged but adored by the men whom they were not giving a square deal. On the other hand we have seen wives who stinted themselves to help their men get on, who worked and saved and slaved for them, who apparently had no appreciation from their husbands, even, sometimes, suffered shameful neglect at their hands.

But it is very difficult to generalize about these things. Sometimes a woman who is selfish and therefore would rate low according to the accepted standards of a good wife, actually succeeds in making a man happy to a greater extent than her self-sacrificing sister who fails in some other quality which her husband requires for content and happiness.

After all, the things which make men and women happy are those which fill the requirements of their individual natures. In spite of the fact that it is not to their best interests, there are men who are willing to spend their lives in the service of the bill collector to come home to a care-free, jolly, amusing woman, and who would be made perfectly miserable by the unselfish though more serious-minded type whom a different man might regard as the ideal wife and mother. The trouble with women who spend their lives on the altar of sacrifice and duty is frequently that they are no less exacting with others. And most men find it irksome to be held to the line of such rigorous standards.

The ideal wife, of course, like the ideal husband, is the one who has the happy and delightful mixture of qualities that is neither too good nor too bad, that makes her fun to live with at a not too great price.

Body of Caruso Lies in State; Embalmed in 1921

Because his friends and admirers in his native Italy could not bear to think of the body of Enrico Caruso moldering away in the earth after his death in 1921, they had it embalmed by a special process to preserve it indefinitely. The corpse of the famous singer still lies in a glass-covered casket in a mausoleum near Naples wrapped in an American flag.

A Cheerful Briton
That German Steel
We Go Up to 14 Miles
Danger to Their Souls

Maj. L. B. Angas, British financier, addressing the American Bankers' association, says: "Confidence has returned to the United States, fear has declined, monetary velocity will increase. There will be an immediate boom—first, in consumer goods; second, in plant and machinery; third, in housing industries."

Arthur Brisbane

The British major—may all he says be verified and multiplied by ten—says truly there is any amount of money in America, but it "revolves" too slowly. It will soon speed up and "revolve," or change hands thirty-five times a year.

If Lloyds would insure the accuracy of the major's prediction, a good many would buy policies.

The particularly offensive plan to buy in Germany steel to build the Triborough bridge in New York will probably not go through. It is explained by those concerned that they can buy 1,000,000 pounds of German steel piling for less than half the American price; as a further "reason" it is said "American firms submitted identical bids."

The government's blue eagle was invented to prevent price cutting; but that is not the question, nor is the difference in price or the fact that work is taken from American workers to give it to German workers the most important fact. Buying steel in Germany, helping to finance the German steel industry and Mr. Hitler's program, with American dollars, would seem to indorse Hitler's program of persecution. That is the important fact.

Officers of the American air corps, Capts. A. W. Stevens and Orvil Anderson, rose above the earth into the stratosphere to a height greater than any human being had ever reached, with the possible exception, of course, of Elijah going up in his chariot of fire.

The American officers radioed: "We are at 74,187 feet, trying for 80,000 feet." They did not go higher, but broke all records.

Seventy-four thousand one hundred and eighty-seven feet is more than 14 miles, 2,000 feet higher than the unofficial Russian record of 72,200 feet.

A movie news reel photographer in Ethiopia, Edward Genock, was assaulted when he tried to make moving pictures of warriors at Harar. The Ethiopians beat the camera man, explaining afterward, "We shall lose our souls if we are photographed." That will surprise Hollywood, where the belief is the other way around. Once, it was generally believed, even by real Christians, that if you made a wax miniature figure of a man and stuck pins in it at intervals you would kill the original. Man is a superstitious biped.

Not long ago, when foreign countries were starving, America sent over American corn, and the foreign countries would not eat it. Even Russia refused.

Now, thanks to various devices for persuading our farmers to produce as little as possible, the United States imports more than 20,000,000 bushels of corn in one year.

Shortage of corn means shortage of food for hogs, and that meant expensive "hog meat," pork chops and bacon.

Somebody always has to pay the bill, and now it appears to be those that eat, a decided majority.

At Maryland's Pimlico race track a horse named Axican, winning the $1,000 relay steeplechase, paid $340.40 for a $2 betting ticket, 170 times the amount paid. That news will cause many unfortunate geese to lose several times $340. Nobody ever won at race track gambling in the long run. If that were possible, who would support bookmakers and tracks?

Speaking in Arlington national cemetery, the President warned the country that there is danger of war, urging "adequate defense on land, on sea, and in air."

He knows, as does everybody, that defense, first in the air, and second under the water, is most important.

President Roosevelt announced the early "consummation of a commercial agreement between Canada and the United States," referring to "our two peoples, each independent in themselves, closely knit by ties of blood and common heritage, with standards of life substantially the same."

While eleven lawyers and clients discussed the sale of a window-cleaning business in New York's Brownsville, four young gunmen entered, said, pleasantly, "Reach for the moon, gentlemen," meaning, "Stick 'em up." The hands went up; the gunmen walked out with $2,261 in cash.

That was not playing the game. It is customary for lawyers to get money from gunmen, although, doubtless, these were not that type of lawyer.

Industrial Smoke Seen Menace to Popular Aviation

Wireless of Little Use to Owner of Private Ship

PITTSBURGH. — Industrial smoke is a major obstacle blocking the real popularization of aviation: the day when the "little fellow" in his own private plane will take trips by air as he does today in his motor car.

This in summary is the verdict of H. B. Mellor and L. B. Sisson, smoke experts of the Mellon Institute for Industrial Research here.

"A wider use of private planes for ordinary transportation purposes in industrial regions appears more dependent upon securing air freer of smoke and smoke-prolonging fogs than it is upon the use of devices for blind flying and constant radio communication between ship and port," the smoke authorities report.

Calls Wireless Impractical.

The present blind-flying apparatus with which the fast commercial transport planes are now equipped would bring the "little fellow" through smoke-obscured areas if he had them, but, adds the report: "The prospects for giving wireless service to small planes appear to be slim; the little fellow is not being encouraged to install wireless equipment because of the limited number of wavelengths alloted on the band for aviation. Addition of private flyers to the radio service maintained between ships and landing fields would cause congestion and hamper service to the growing number of large passenger, mail and express airliners, authorities say."

As matters now stand, the pilot of a private plane may have a receiving set and can listen in on weather reports and the two-way communication between transport planes and airports, but he is unable to ask the field for directions that might keep him out of the path of commercial planes, which are flying blind.

Must Depend on Eyesight.

A private pilot therefore must still depend on his own eyesight. If he cannot see a mile or more in every direction, he is in danger every time he gets within range of a well-traveled airlane or busy landing field.

With radio wavelengths unavailable for the private flyer, the solution of the problem, state Mellor and Sisson, involves the more careful location of future airports principally on the windward side of industrial areas.

Man, Boy, Dog Live in Different Climates

VIENNA.—You, your small boy and your dog live in different climates as you walk down a hot city street together—especially if your dog is a dachshund. The closer to the pavement you are, the more uncomfortable the world is.

This fact, recognized in a general sort of way for a long time, has been reduced to a measured basis by temperature readings taken by Vienna weather men during the recent warm weather. Their observations would be closely paralleled by similar readings taken in any large city.

With air temperatures in the 90s and upper 80s, pavement temperatures mounted well above the century mark. In a courtyard that was partly paved, partly sodded, the temperature at ground level on the grass was 103 degrees Fahrenheit. The corresponding temperature on a granite block pavement under full sunshine was 124 degrees, while a dark wood-block pavement fairly simmered at 153 degrees. A few yards away was a shaded alley; into this the observer carried his tortured thermometer and set it on the stone pavement. The mercury ran rapidly down again to 81 degrees.

Fish May Be Used to Detect Fluorine

PASADENA, CALIF.—Small fish may in future be used to detect the presence of fluorine in drinking water instead of the tedious chemical tests now necessary, it appears from a report of Dr. Andrew Neff of the California Institute of Technology here.

Small amounts of fluorine in drinking water cause a condition known as mottled enamel in the teeth of children who drink such water. Doctor Neff now finds that the teeth of fish living in fluorine-containing water also are affected. If the degree to which the teeth are affected can be accurately correlated with the amount of fluorine in the water, the fish test may replace the lengthy chemical analyses now used to detect the very small amounts of fluorine which cause the condition.

Says Door Handles on Streamlined Autos Are Menace

Like Knives on Sides of Egyptian Chariots

BALTIMORE.—When the ancient Egyptians drove their chariots into battle, they mounted sharp-pointed knives in the wheel hubs to sideswipe the enemy if they couldn't run him down.

When modern men ride forth for a peaceful Sunday drive, they unknowingly carry similar deadly weapons mounted in the doors of their streamlined motor cars. Dr. Samuel McLanahan of this city calls attention to this in a report to the American Medical association.

The automobile door handle is a "menacing and dangerous projection," the cause of disfiguring injuries and occasional deaths, Doctor McLanahan charges. He describes six striking cases of accident resulting from persons being struck by the door handles of motor cars and mentions six other recent accidents of a similar nature, two of which were fatal puncture wounds of the skull.

Cases in Point.

One case described in his report was that of a motorcyclist who collided with an automobile. The car door handle was driven through his skull. The handle of a taxicab tore a deep gash in the chest of a little girl running in the street. A negro crossing the highway had a long gash torn in his abdomen when struck by a passing car.

A young man of twenty-two has lost all sensation in his right arm and use of that member since an automobile struck him and the door handle tore a hole in his forearm. While crossing a bridge recently, a boy of sixteen was sideswiped and his right hand permanently disfigured by the door handle.

"A casual glance at a row of passing cars cannot but convince one of the potential danger of this projecting piece of metal," Doctor McLanahan declares. "In the recent streamlined models is to be seen a door handle that is little short of a spear—truly a vicious weapon—directed toward any victim who may chance to be in its path. The possibilities of mutilation are easily imagined."

Some Less Menacing.

Cars with handles that are directed toward the rear, because the hinges of the door lie in that direction, are less menacing, the doctor states, although they are still dangerous projections.

Improvements must finally come from automobile engineers, the physician declares. He has approached one large manufacturing company and earnest consideration of the question has been promised.

Doctor McLanahan suggests two requisites for safety. The first is a handle (if there must be a handle) without sharp projections, as instanced in the oval ones on certain obsolete models. The second is a handle that lies either close against or is counter sunk within the side of the door.

Ethiopia Only Nation in World That Uses 13-Month Calendar

OF ALL the countries in the world, Ethiopia is the only one which uses a calendar of 13 months. The Ethiopian year commences on September 11 except in years preceding leap year, when it begins on September 12, as was the case in 1935. The year is divided not as ours, but into twelve months of thirty days each and one of five days, or in leap years six days. Consequently the subjects of the King of Kings are always out of step, as far as the calendar is concerned, with the rest of the world.

This type of calendar, however, is of extremely ancient origin. Long before any other nation had devised an accurate calendar, the Egyptians had contrived one which took account of the true length of the year, basing it upon the sun instead of the moon, as all other peoples had done. Twelve months, each of thirty days, were set up, and the additional five days were distributed as extra holidays in convenient places throughout the year. As a result of this accurate and dependable calendar by which the priests could definitely foretell the seasons, Egypt grew to be the richest nation in the world. The survival of this type of calendar in Ethiopia was brought about by the adoption of the Egyptian or Coptic variety of Christianity more than 1,500 years ago.

Grave of Rich Viking Uncovered in Sweden

UPPSALA, SWEDEN.—The grave of a Fifth century Viking chief, buried with his horse, armor, and more gold ornaments than any burial mound in Sweden has ever revealed, has been unearthed at Fullero, in Upland province.

The Viking was buried in full panoply, is the verdict of archeologists who have examined the remnants of cloth, shield buckle, silver spur, and gold rings, from the grave. Parts of the horse's skeleton were also found. Above the grave was a fire pit of hard clay lumps for the funeral pyre.

The antiquities go, by law, to the Historical museum at Stockholm.

Hefty Chap Omitted Few Items in Simple Modesty

A hefty countryman on one of his rare visits to the big city entered a small restaurant which advertised a special lunch—as much as the customer cared to eat for two shillings.

The waiter showed him to a table.

"Will you take the special?" he asked.

"What's it consist of?" asked the countryman.

"There's tomato soup, oxtail soup, grilled sole, boiled halibut, roast beef, Yorkshire pudding, new potatoes, apple tart and coffee," replied the waiter, reading out the menu.

"That's champion," said the countryman. "Bring me tomato soup, oxtail soup, sole, halibut, beef, pudding, spuds, jam roll, and some cheese and coffee."

"Will that be all?" asked the astonished waiter.

"That's all," said the other.

"Then may I ask," put in the waiter quietly, "what's wrong with the apple tart and cream?"—London Answers.

"OH WAD THE POWERS—"

An elegant young woman strolled down the main street of Skopje, Yugoslavia, attracting admiring glances from all she passed. Suddenly a man dashed out of a shop, lifted her off her feet, took off her shoes and set her down again to walk home in her stocking feet. The assailant, a shoemaker, explained that the shoes had not been paid for, and he was tired of seeing his clients going about in comfort while he was on the verge of bankruptcy.

SAYS MRS. W. W. HICKEY, OF CHICAGO, ILL.

"THERE'S a lot of good baking in that 10c can of Calumet," observes Mrs. Hickey. "It's worth more than a dime any day!

"Of course, with my big family I get the full-pound can—and it's only 25c now. As long as I bake, Calumet will be in my pantry!"

Grandfather Rommel; who was a baker for 40 years, says: "Calumet takes the guesswork out of the job nowadays."

LOOK AT THE NEW CALUMET CAN! A simple twist . . . and the Easy-Opening Top lifts off. No delay, no spilling, no broken fingernails!

WHAT makes Calumet so dependable? Why is it different from other baking powders? Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick action for the mixing bowl—set free by liquid. A slower action for the oven—set free by heat. This Double-Action produces perfect leavening.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in its history...The regular price of the Full-Pound Can is now only 25c! And ask to see the new 10c can —a lot of good baking for a dime—with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder. A product of General Foods.

"WHY was coffee bad for you, Dad? ...I thought it was bad just for us kids!"
"Oh, no! Many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee upsets their nerves, causes indigestion or keeps them awake nights!"

If you are bothered by headaches, or indigestion, or can't sleep soundly . . . try Postum for 30 days. It contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. It's easy to make . . . costs less than half a cent a cup. It's delicious, too . . . and may prove a real help. A product of General Foods.

FORMER KLEMME GIRL WEDS

Friends here have received announcements of the marriage of Miss Roxanna Schaper to Mr. Lester Davis of Albuquerque, New Mexico. The ceremony took place at Albuquerque on Nov. 28th. Mrs. Davis had taught in the Charter Oak schools for the past three years. Mr. Davis is employed by the government.

Projects Get Approval

The WPA projects asked for by Hancock county officials have been approved in Washington and will approximate $1,200. The work will be the refinishing of the vaults in the courthouse, rewiring and painting offices.

Dr. and Mrs. Dulmes, and Mrs. Mary Mutch and Miss Ada, of Grundy Center attended a golden wedding anniversary Sunday for Mr. and Mrs. John McWhirter of Spencer. Mrs. Mutch and Mrs. McWhirter are sisters. There were sixty in attendance and all enjoyed a delicious turkey dinner. The place cards were white with a gold bell tied in the corner with a gold ribbon. Mr. and Mrs. McWhirter received many fine gifts and a purse donation and many pretty flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Kirkwood entertained several friends at a six thirty dinner Wednesday evening. A lovely three course dinner was served. After which bridge was enjoyed at four tables. High prizes were won by Mrs. George Stokesbary and Martin Barz; low prizes were won by Mrs. Carl Anderson and Harvey Harberts. Geo. Stokesbary received the travel prize.

John Schachterle of Ackley and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Fischer and son, Edward, of Iowa Falls, came Saturday and visited at the Lew Neuberger home until Sunday.

GARNER PERSONS HIT BY TRAIN AT LAKE

SHAMROCKS PLAY FIRST CONFERENCE GAME

Friday night, December 6th, the Klemme Shamrocks will play their first conference game of the year with the Hayfield team as their opponents, here on the Klemme floor. We don't know what Hayfield has this year, but we split two games with them last season, so it should be a pretty good game. A week from Friday we play our southern neighbors, Goodell, at Goodell, and I don't need to tell you that will be one game we want to win. This is also a conference game. On Monday the sixteenth we play Garner at Garner. This will be the first game we have scheduled with Garner for some time so we are going to work to show them that we have a good team. Everybody come and see these games, and help the Shamrocks win.

P. S. CLASS WORKING ON SPEECHES

For the past few weeks, the Public Speaking Class have been diligently working on talks which they expect to give before the assembly this week. They are supposed to be only five minutes long and will deal with such topics as, "Italian-Ethiopian War," "Automobile Accidents "Airplane Accidents," Perils of Staying at Home," "The Work of Better Business Bureaus," Mile Stones in Medicine" and "False Advertising." The above subjects are the very latest and those who have been preparing their's find they are very interesting besides being educational.

In the near future we intend to give extemporaneous talks using the same topics. These will be more difficult as one will not know their topics until about forty minutes before the assigned hour to give them.

DID YOU KNOW?

Who was the first person to get a basketball letter in his freshman year? Answer in next week's Squealer.

Answer to last week's question:

Klemme had its first basket ball team inthe school year 1921-22. Elsewhere in this issue will be found interesting facts about this team.

ORCHESTRA SELLS CANDY

The High School Orchestra is quite pleased to think they have taken a step forward in getting some kind of a uniform. We have planned to sell home made candy at home games, and appreciate very much the buying of it at the Ventura game.

LOCAL EXCHANGE IN CONTEST

The Iowa Union Telephone Co. again conducted their annual campaign in this district for the installation of new telephones. Carl Anderson, local manager, finished about midway in the district contest. Carl has knocked off the high spots in a number of campaign. However, Carl is on his own campaign nearly every month and puts in new telephones like "nobody s business" so a campaign means nothing to him.....it's just another flock of telephones to him.

SHAMROCKS PLAY HAYFIELD HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

The Klemme High School Shamrocks will open their Seven Eagles conference season on their home floor this Friday evening when they meet Hayfield high school in a double header. Last year the Hayfield basketeers defeated the local team on this floor.

Correct this sentence: "I believe strongly in the enforcement of all laws that seem just and proper to me."

Thoughts---
---At The Linotype

By ETAOIN SHRDLU

This Friday evening the six high schools belonging to the Seven Eagles Conference begin thein annual battle for the conference title. And believe you me, it will be a close race.

Just to put our neck in a noose right at the start, we pick Klemme, Goodell and Kanawha to finish in the first division, with Crystal Lake playing the role of dark horse. We will let you pick the order in which they'll finish.

Klemme has nine lettermen, including four regulars from last year's team. And don't overlook the fact that the Little Shamocks won the Conference Reserves title last year. Brinkman, Kilgore and Kaduce were mentioned on the 1934-35 All-Conference Team. The Shamrocks have showed up well in their non-conference games and we conceed them an even chance for the Conference crown this year.

Goodell lost but two regulars of last year's championship team. They have plenty of scoring punch as shown by impressive victories over Belmond, Sheffield and Rowan. T. Ahrenkeil, Clark and M. Ahrenkeil are the maintays of the conference champions.

Kanawha will miss the services of Tande, guard and Uken, center, but the two Yeakel boys are both valuable players and with this year's mates form smooth-clicking aggregation. Coach Frisbee's teams seem to work the best when the competition is keen.

Crystal Lake has two outstanding forwards in Scanlon and Rose, but will find it hard to replace Willis at center. They had no out-of-the-ordinary material among their reserevs. It is a question of whether or not the twin midget hot-shots will be able to pile up enough points.

Hayfield and Woden lacked reserve strength to go far in the conference this year, but might prove strong enough to ruin the championship hopes of some of the leading teams.

In Friday nights games we like the following: (Our choice in capitals.)

Hayfield at KLEMME
GOODELL at Kanawha
Woden at CRYSTAL LAKE

1936 AGRICULTURAL OUTLOOK MEETINGS BEGIN DEC. 4TH

The first of a series of eleven meetings over the county on the Agricultural situation for 1936 will be held December 4th at Ellington Center, acocrding to S. J. Oberhaused, county agent, who will conduct forenoon, afternoon and evening sessions.

Everyone from the country and town is invited to attend and gather information concerning the probable supplies and prices of livestock and grains for 1936. The outlook in regard to the business situation, as it affects the laborer and income of the farmer will be discussed.

Brief discussion of corn loans for this years crop will no doubt engage questions of interest to our farmers. The new Potato and Rye control programs of the AAA, as they stand at the present time will be given by the county agent. Farmers are urged to attend these meetings and have as many of their questions answered as possible.

Following is the schedule of nearby meetings:

Friday, Dec. 6, Goodell Community Hall at 1:30 p. m.

Saturday, Dec. 7, Klemme school house at 8 p m.

Thursday, Dec. 12, Kanawha High School at 8 p. m.

Monday, Dec. 16, Garner High School at 8 in the evening.

1936 LICENSE PLATES WENT ON SALE DEC. 2ND

The 1936 automobile license plates went on sale in the office of Roy L McMillin, county treasurer, Monday, Dec. 2.

The new license plates, consist of blue figures on a white background are similar to those of previous years.

A special feature, however, has been added to the truck plates, which are built so that a class plate can be inserted and attached by a locking device. This locking device is such that the plates are not likely to be taken apart or the class plate lost.

People wishing to lay up their cars must surrender their license plates prior to February 1, 1936.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Gary and daughter of Greene came Wednesday evening and visited with Mrs. C. A. Arnold and Miss Minnie Lenz until Saturday afternoon. Other guests at the Arnold home for Thanksgiving Day were Rev. and Mrs. Zabilki and Billy, and Harry Gibbs, wife and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hippin and family; Donald Neuberger, wife and sons; Wert Loger and Clarence Lemke were dinner guests at the Lew Neuberger home Thanksgiving day. Melvin Neuberger and family returned from Minnesota in time for supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Liebendorfer and son, Robert, of Mason City, were dinner guests at the R. A. Jorgenson home Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Waterman and Marian, and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kingery joined the group in time for supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Art Kudje entertained the following to a turkey dinner Thanksgiving Day: Joe Johnson and Miss Mildred; George Johnson and family; Alfred Carpenter and family of Goodell; Clarence Johnson and family of Renwick.

Art Wellemeyer has recently added a Singer Taylor Sewing machine to his furniture shop equipment. The new machine will be used in upholstery work by repairman Leonard Lau.

VARSITY VICTORIOUS 44-29; RESERVES WIN 40-17

The Klemme high school Shamrocks won another game on their home floor Tuesday evening when they defeaed the Corwith teams by large margins. Both games were rough and numerous fouls were called on both teams. The varsity wom 44 to 29 and the Little Shamrocks won a 40 to 17 game.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF AUG. KATTER'S IS OBSERVED

Garner:—The Golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. August Katter was celebrated here in their home Thanksgiving Day by 45 relatives, their children, brothers and sisters and with the Rev. and Mrs. Grosshuesch of Klemme.

August Katter and Louisa Blumer were married 50 years ago in the German Reformed church about four miles south on No. 15 by the Rev. Henry Treick and was the first ceremony performed by him. The young couple settled on farm south of Garner where they lived four years and then on the old Katter homestead where they lived until 1917 when they moved into their present home across from the high school.

The Katters have two daughters and two sons, Mrs. Percy Leese of Aredale and Mrs. Paul Elling of Garner, Ben of Forest City and Elmer of Garner. Another son, Alvin, died in July, 1916. His widow, Mrs. Fern Katter, is county recorder.

JORGENSON-ROBERTSON

Mr. Vernon Jorgenson of Kimbal South Dakota, and Miss Rossie Robertson of Goodell were united in marriage at the Methodist parsonage on Monday evening, the Rev. Wm. Zabilka officiating. The single ring ceremony was used. Mr. and Mrs. Jorgenson will make their home in South Dakota.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Wright of Belmond, and Miss Wilma Trumbull who teaches at Postville were guests at the Sumner Trumbell home on Thanksgiving Day. Miss Trumbull was high school principal in our Klemme schools for several years.

Mr. and Mrs. John Etchen entertained Mary and Albert Swanson, Orville Bridges and family, Roy Swanson and sisters, and Mr. and Mrs. Francis Lawhorn and baby of Garner to Sunday dinner.

Rev. and Mrs. Grosshuesch children were guests Sunday Fred Neuhring home.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART

Washington.—Through some months past, Cordell Hull, secretary of state, has been proceeding cautiously and quietly in the negotiation of trade agreements with foreign nations. His work has attracted comparatively little public attention although throughout the negotiations individual economic interests who stood to gain or lose depending upon their lines of business have made known their feelings quite emphatically. Six of these trade agreements, now called trade treaties, had been consummated in this manner. When the seventh agreement came along, however, the story was different. That was the treaty with our northern neighbor, Canada.

Canadian Trade Pact

It is impossible here to set forth the list of commercial products encompassed in the new trade agreement with Canada. I doubt if most of the people of this country ever will know details of that treaty. By the nature of things, few persons can be interested in all of the items. But, I do not believe that it is the question of individual interest in the entire list that ought to concern us. Aside from the policy involved in the negotiation and agreement on tariff concessions, the importance of the Canadian treaty to the average individual lies in the one or two, or half a dozen at most, items that affect each one personally.

I do not mean to say that the policy involved is unimportant. The contrary is decidedly true. From a political standpoint, of course, it is general policy that will be debated; from an individual standpoint it will be the direct effect that execution of that policy has on each of us that will determine our ultimate views and to that extent determine whether we will be for or against the general policy of reducing tariffs enacted against certain kinds of imports.

The new agreement with Canada takes effect January 1—provided the Canadian parliament ratifies it. No such ratification is necessary in this country.

Had Free Hand

The treaty was negotiated by Mr. Hull and President Roosevelt under the authority granted by congress in legislation passed a year ago which gave to the President the privilege of working out trade treaties without further congressional sanction. That law restricted the President in only one way, namely, the requirement that an increase or reduction of tariff rates included in those trade treaties may not exceed 50 per cent of the rate fixed in the present tariff laws. So, it is seen that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull had virtually complete authority. It will operate for three years and, as far as I have been able to discover, it will be effective after Canadian ratification and there will be nothing anybody can do about it, be it good or bad.

In making public the agreement negotiated by Mr. Hull with Prime Minister MacKenzie King, the President asserted his belief that the agreement will initiate or revive a flow of commerce back and forth across our northern frontier in a manner that will be most helpful. He considered that the agreement would mean additional markets for some of our products and therefore additional work for some of our unemployed. The Canadian prime minister was of the opinion that in this agreement a long step had been taken toward healing a breach that has existed between the two countries for 69 years. He was hopeful, like President Roosevelt, that the channels of trade again will be filled, perhaps not to the levels of the boom days of 1928 and 1929, but would again carry satisfactory volume.

It will be recalled that our shipments to Canada in 1930 amounted to about $900,000,000. The depression cut those shipments to approximately $300,000,000 last year. So, if the predictions of the President and Mr. MacKenzie King are in any way fulfilled, a considerable traffic is due to begin upon the operation of this new treaty.

Any discussion of the treaty, however, that failed to call attention to basic conditions, in my opinion, would be short of its goal. So, it seems to me that while the President and the Canadian prime minister hold such high hope for trade revival, one ought not forget that trade will not flow if no market, no demand, exists for the goods. It may well be that by reducing the tariff duties that must be paid at the frontier on goods enumerated in the treaty that a reduction in prices will follow. It may then follow that the consequent reduction in prices will stir up a demand for the products. But that is not certain.

Now from the political standpoint, examination of the treaty must take into consideration individual items. And how those individual items affect communities and economic interests in this country. Already, we here in Washington have been deluged with the complaints of certain communities against provisions of the treaty. Likewise, we have heard those provisions praised from other sections. Thus, from the political standpoint we see developing a fine old fight over the tariff.

Political Standpoint

Tariff questions are and always have been sectional questions. Industrial communities want to be protected against inroads of foreign competition where labor is cheaper. Agriculture wants to be protected against imports from bountiful producing lands in those countries where vast open spaces and high productivity exist at the minimum of cost. Importers and consumers of imported products always have fought and always will fight to have low tariff rates so that the things they buy may enter this country at the lowest possible price. With reference to the Canadian treaty, these same conditions exist.

Early outbursts indicate that cattle raising communities and dairy producing sections are up in arms because the treaty reduced a tariff protection accorded against imports of cattle and cattle products and the products of the dairy.

Lumber interests are upset. It is true that the lumber market in the United States has been in the doldrums for several years and naturally the lumber people do not want to have Canadian shipments absorb what little market they have.

These are just a few of the complaints. They are offset partially at least by the praise and the hopes of some other phases of agriculture such as fruit and vegetable growers who feel that they can now market their products in Canada. Without even a careful analysis of the more than seven hundred items involved in the treaty, it is to be seen that there will be possible markets available after January 1 to a number of agricultural lines and to some industrial interests. Yet it remains, as I said earlier, for the passage of time to disclose exactly whether the net result will be favorable to us commercially or whether the Canadians have put over a fine bargain from their standpoint.

All of the discussion about the Canadian treaty, however, brings back memory. As a result of these recollections, I dug back the other day into the congressional debates of 1911 when a Canadian reciprocity agreement was under consideration, backed by the late William Howard Taft. After reading those debates, particularly the observations of the late and distinguished Champ Clark of Missouri and Representative George Norris, now a senator from Nebraska, I could not fail to realize the political dynamite embodied in the new course of international trade relations adopted by President Roosevelt. It was the Canadian reciprocity proposal that defeated Mr. Taft for re-election to the Presidency. It was, indeed, that controversy that caused the organization of the Bull Moose party and that sent Mr. Taft into political oblivion.

Political Dynamite

I am not predicting here that the same consequences are in store for President Roosevelt but it is fair to recall, it seems to me, that the reciprocity proposal of 1911 burned the fingers of every political leader who touched it. The cases are not exactly comparable nor analogous. Mr. Roosevelt has retained a number of tariff duties which were swept aside in the proposed Taft recoprocity arrangement. He is therefore fortified to that extent. But you may be sure that those who sponsor the present Canadian agreement are going to meet the same sort of fight that was made against the Taft proposal.

Then there is in the current treaty circumstance another factor to be considered. It links back to the Champ Clark observations which were made on February 14, 1911. At that time, Mr. Clark was expressing the view that the reciprocity agreement constituted a step at least in the direction of universal peace. In the debate just mentioned, Mr. Norris asked Mr. Clark to elaborate on his view concerning the value of the agreement as an instrument of peace.

"I wanted to ask the gentleman a question along the line of universal peace," said Mr. Norris. "As I understand it, the gentleman favors the bill for at least one reason—that it will have a tendency to bring Canada into the Union."

"Yes," Mr. Clark replied. "I have no doubt about that. I do not have any doubt whatever that day is not far distant when Great Britain will joyfully see all of her North American possessions become a part of this republic. That is the way things are now tending."

So, if the controversy over the present Canadian tariff agreement becomes violent, I think it is fair to expect that again we will hear the question discussed whether the United States is seeking to annex Canada—to make Canada part and parcel of the United States. Of course, as far as anyone can see today, annexation of Canada is inconceivable but the incident is related here simply to show how far-reaching such controversies may become.

PROTECTING THE HUMAN EAR

By JOHN LARDNER

IF YOU read the newspapers you may have followed the campaign of Dr. H. Fulkin Snev against functional cauliflower ear, also known in medical circles as listeners' disease or paralysis of the protest gland or just plain silent suffering.

Doctor Snev has done great work in this field. He was the first to discover that the germ of the disease is carried about and inflicted on innocent victims by certain well defined carrier types—fight managers, barbers, evangelists, traveling salesmen, authors, actors, congressmen, etiquette experts, etc. Once he managed to isolate the germ, but when he got it isolated he had to keep it around the house, where it talked all his family into a state of coma and refused to eat anything but grade A milk and imported caviar.

So Doctor Snev gave up the isolation idea and began to take down case histories of the various victims. The following history is typical of one phase of the disease (inability to hang up the telephone receiver):

"Patient complained of splitting pains in the occipital region, trembling of the hands, nervousness at the sound of bells. Slight fever, normal pulse, blue eyes, blond hair, 32 waist (clinical note—quite a dish). Patient reported telephone conversation with aggressive carrier type (welfare worker) as follows:

Patient: Hello?

Carrier: Is that you, Mrs. Z? This is Mrs. van Gans-Otway speaking, how are you, dear, I want to ask a favor of you, which I know you can't refuse, because you've done so much already, so very much, I can't tell you how grateful we were for your little donation to the Fund for Homeless Stoats. I wish you could see the work we've done with that fund you'd be so proud of having helped, why one little fellow, a ferret, he was, really, but he comes under the jurisdiction of our work with stoats, we found him the loveliest home with Mr. Squameyer, you know they're so happy to have him they say that he's bitten off the heads of fifteen rats already and the toe of one of the little Squameyers, yes, so cute, and we wondered if you—

P: I'm afraid—

C: I know you'll love to do this, you have so much talent, it's for the pageant; you know the pageant we're running for the relief of Persecuted Opossums we have a part in mind for you, a lovely part with a costume, well, just something you could make yourself, you know, but you'd look so lovely in anything, it's a historical pageant, you know the history of the village, we want you to be the spirit, yes the spirit of the Other Side of the Railroad Tracks. You see the idea, it's just—

P: Really, Mrs. van Ans-Gotwary, I mean Mrs. Otway van Gotway, could we talk about it some other time? I'm expecting—

C: We have a part for Mr. Z. too I know he won't refuse, it's an Indian yes for the battle, the Indians are all killed by the ancestors of Mr. Schless and Mr. Fulton, I really don't believe Mr. Schless's people were in this country at the time but we must make the best of it although Mr. Fulton says he won't consider it if Mr. Schless—

"At this point," according to Doctor Snev, "patient reported severe trembling fit and suspension of consciousness. Revived five or six minutes later to find receiver still in hand and opponents talking strongly. Apologized for remissness and listened four minutes more. Symptoms—bruises and contusions about ear, paralysis of will.

In a case like this Doctor Snev recommends that the patient say, three times, at intervals of fifteen seconds: "I am now going to hang up the receiver." If the third warning is disregarded, the patient should proceed to make good his boast as advertised. Extreme cases require extreme remedies. That's what Doctor Snev says, and no one has a better right to talk than this gifted scientist and horse player.

Many people regard face-to-face conversations as harder to interrupt than phone conversations. It's painful to insult anyone to his face. But Doctor Snev laughs and calls this a weakness. He has listed half a dozen so-called "gambits" for cutting the enthusiastic word-slinger dead in his tracks.

One of these is the "impartial gambit," which should be thrown into the conversation every half minute to confuse the speaker. It goes like this:

Speaker: So Edith was on horseback that morning, you know she can ride anything on four legs, and she was riding past the reservoir, the south end, when we met her. Well, you know how it is. When you haven't seen a girl for—

Victim: Some say one, some say the other.

Speaker: I beg pardon?

Victim: Some say one, some say the other.

Speaker: Well, Edith was on horseback—

Victim: Some say one, some say the other.

You will find that this device breaks up the monologue in a nice way and leaves no feeling in the speaker's mind except a suspicion that you would be better off in a sanitarium, which is probably correct.

According to Doctor Snev, this system always leaves hard feelings, which may be all for the best.

Then there is the case of a tot of my acquaintance, who has perfected the water-works system of interrupting conversation. When his elders and betters begin to weary him with their talk he bursts into tears. This requires a strong set of lungs and ready control of the tear ducts, but it shows that a child of tender years can be as smart as a fox, if not smarter.

Other methods include yawning eight times to the minute, studying your watch, and emptying a bottle of scotch or rye on the floor between you and the speaker. This latter device is bound to fascinate him and check his flow of thought through sheer horror.

The President of the United States, of course, has a very easy time with talkers. Etiquette requires everyone to shut up and go away when the President rises to his feet. This sounds perfect, but it happened in the case of President Harding that the gag missed fire. The President didn't know about it. He remained seated for hours at a stretch while two earnest parties bit a hole in his ear and poured words into it. The late Ike Hoover finally tipped him off about his privilege, after which Mr. Harding was in a vertical position practically all the time.

But these little anecdotes, though they brighten up the story, have nothing to do with the average man. The average man must fight his own battle against listeners' disease and cauliflower ear. In this battle he has no greater friend than Dr. H. Fulkin Snev. Doctor Snev admits it.

"Though I say so myself," he told your correspondent the other day, "I have done more to break off monologues than any man living. It's a gift, a natural talent. Let me tell you how it happened. As a child I was highly sensitive to sound. I was a beautiful child, they say, with large blue eyes, blond curls, and a warm, trusting expression that must have been irresistible. People used to stop me on the street just to pat my head. I won six contests for beauty and charm, and I can show you the trophies. I—"

"Where were you on the night of February 7, 1912?" I asked suddenly, realizing the horror of my predicament. But the doctor's tip did no good. He is still talking to me as as I write this.

Soft Corn Now a Grave Certainty

Ear Silage May Be Required to Conserve Maximum Feeding Value.

By PROF. H. P. RUSK, Head Animal Husbandry Dept., University of Illinois. WNU Service.

This is now certain to be the seventh soft corn year since 1900, with the amount of soft and chaffy corn ranging from 10 to 50 per cent of the crop, according to estimates of crop and live stock specialists at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

No class of live stock can utilize this soft corn as well as can cattle, and no method of salvaging the crop has been found superior to ear-corn silage. Trench silos or other temporary forms of silos may have to be put up on some farms to conserve the maximum feeding value of the immature corn.

Horses and mules offer scant outlets for soft corn, inasmuch as heavy death losses have resulted from feeding this class of live stock on damaged corn such as is found in almost every crib during a soft-corn year. Sheep are notoriously finicky about their feed and cannot utilize much soft corn except in the form of silage or as ear corn direct from the field before any spoilage has taken place. Hogs are better soft-corn users than horses and sheep, but trouble with scours and the inability of hogs to eat enough high-moisture corn to make fast gains have made soft corn unpopular with hog feeders.

As for the different methods of utilizing soft corn, the best one that was found in a long series of investigations at the agricultural college was ear-corn silage. Pasturing the soft corn in the field with cattle did not prove satisfactory. Shocking was dangerous, and cribbing was out of the question.

Silage made from the snapped ears, husk and all, kept as well as normal silage and made an excellent feed for beef cattle. There was practically as much feeding value in the dry matter of soft corn as in the dry matter of sound corn. However, because of the high moisture content of the soft corn, steers could not eat as much feed equivalent in that form as they could in the form of normally matured corn. Hence cattle fed soft corn do not gain as fast as those full-fed on sound corn.

An acre of soft corn may have as much dry matter in the ears as an acre of mature corn. If this dry matter is conserved and properly fed, it will produce practically as much beef as an acre of sound corn.

Research Proves an Aid in Fighting Camelthorn

Because research showed a few years ago that some plants can "go into reverse" in carrying solutions through the vascular system—that is, absorb a liquid through the leaves and take it to the roots—the California department of agriculture has been able to combat camelthorn, a spiny leguminous weed which has invaded certain lands in the southern part of that state.

Jars are filled with a solution of sodium arsenite and placed at intervals in a patch of camelthorn. A handful of the growing plants is thrust into the poisonous solution and left there. The solution is carried through the leaves and stems into the long, fibrous roots. Because of the extensive root system, large areas of the weed are killed.

The camelthorn, says L. W. Kephart, weed specialist in the Department of Agriculture, came into this country chiefly in alfalfa seed from Turkestan. Despite the spiny stems the plant is grazed by camels in some parts of Asia.

Soy Beans for Horses

Horses and mules can best utilize the soy bean crop as hay rather than as grain, says Iowa State college. The grain is high in protein, hence should be fed in limited quantities, and then only when balance of ration is deficient in protein. Soy bean hay has proved satisfactory for horses when other roughage such as timothy hay oat straw or corn fodder is used for 50 per cent of the roughage requirement. Soy bean straw has given good results as a wintering roughage for idle work animals when some oat straw and some grain is fed in addition.

Cattle Feeding Increased

The number of cattle shipped into the eastern corn belt in the first nine months of 1935 was the largest in 17 years, the United States Department of Agriculture reports. In the Western corn belt states, where feeding was greatly reduced because of drouth last year, there will be heavy increase this year, although due to a relatively short corn crop feeding operations may not be up to normal. With supplies of hay and roughage large and prices low in nearly all states, there is a widespread tendency to turn to cattle feeding to utilize available feed.

Wintering Bees

There are four requirements for good wintering of bees, states Elwood Montgomery, Purdue university entomologist; i. e., a vigorous queen, a strong colony, sufficient stores and adequate protection. In this territory bees can be wintered out of doors. They should be carefully protected, he advises. Every hive of bees should be inspected. Weak colonies should be combined. Diseased colonies should be destroyed. Those with an insufficient supply of feed should be fed.

Death From the Air Barring the Inventor
The Republican Odds
To Starve Italy

Warfare in Ethiopia consists largely in surprising the enemy in some narrow gorge or valley. Ethiopians have thus surprised Italians on a small scale. Now the Italians have shown that the thing can be done from the air by killing 2,000 Ethiopian warriors, of whom 20,000 were massed in the Mei Mezoid valley, south of Makale. Ethiopians withstood, with fine courage, the attack with machine guns, incendiary and explosive bombs.

Arthur Brisbane

England really has free speech. On your soap box in Hyde Park you may say what you please, if you do not advocate crime.

But England does not like free speech from another country, through the ether. The British Broadcasting company will not let Marconi talk from Rome to Englishmen over the radio. He might convince them that it is preposterous to try to starve out Italy for doing in Ethiopia what England has done in many places. The ruling seems hard on Marconi, considering that he invented radio. Without him there would be no "British Broadcasting company."

Those that make betting a business are often sound in their political judgments. They are at least cold, calculating; sentiment does not cloud their vision.

On the Republican Presidential nomination the betting now stands:

Senator William E. Borah, 8 to 1. Governor Landon of Kansas, 10 to 1. Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, 15 to 1. Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, 15 to 1. Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, Ogden L. Mills, Senator David A. Reed, all 20 to 1.

Professional bettors agree that Governor Landon is gaining, and will probably lead the procession at 6 to 1 in a few days. Band wagon climbers are more and more polite to Governor Landon.

The "sanctions" wall thrown by England and France around Italy, smaller nations co-operating, to "suffocate and starve Italy," as Mussolini puts it, is now complete. Two million young organized Italians protest against the effort to punish Italy for doing to Ethiopia what England and France have done to other, more nearly civilized countries.

H. G. Wells, aged sixty-nine, younger and more brilliant than when he wrote "Doctor Moreau's Island" and "The War of the Worlds," now in America on his way to see Hollywood, says, "The film is a finer art than the novel, stage or the opera."

Mr. Wells' open mind proves his youth. The moving picture is greater in its possibilities than book, stage or opera, because it contains all three, plus the marvelous power of photography.

Britain's ambassador is conferring with our State department concerning Japan's plan to seize Chinese provinces, containing 95,000,000 Chinese, 35,000,000 more than the total population of Japan.

If the Japanese could control, arm and use 100,000,000 Chinese in the air and on the ground, that would be interesting. But it would not be our business, and it is to be hoped that the British will not persuade our State department that this country ought to attend to it.

Spiritually, politically and otherwise important is the proposed "merger" approved by bishops of the three branches of the Methodist Episcopal church. Together, the Methodist Episcopal church, Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Methodist Protestant church would number 7,500,000 members, the largest Protestant group.

Young men are coming back into fashion. Dr. Alan Valentine, only thirty-four, former master of Pierson college at Yale, is made president of Rochester university and starts well by denouncing the "ballyhoo" of college athletics, football especially. He speaks with authority, not as a weakling bookworm, for he was a college athlete at Swarthmore, member of the Olympic team at Paris in 1928.

The American Bankers association reveals the interesting fact that our banks hold fifteen thousand million dollars' worth of government bonds—in figures, $15,000,000,000.

Well might a most important official of the government say: "Inflation? We have it now, biggest ever seen, frozen in the banks. Wait until it breaks loose."

After the Tory election in England prices went soaring on London's stock exchange. Companies that make war weapons and materials were most buoyant. The masses had voted for more, bigger and better battleships, and war, if necessary.

POULTRY

ARTIFICIAL LIGHT AIDS EGG OUTPUT

Care Is Advised by Expert in Use in Houses.

Because experiments have shown that artificial light on fowls increases their production by means of a stimulating effect rather than causing any increased consumption of feed, lights should be used with a considerable degree of caution, warns an authority in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

If artificial lighting is used excessively, birds may be forced to produce at a rate beyond their capacity which will not last. Under normal conditions a flock of pullets should reach a production of 50 per cent between six and eight weeks after the first eggs are produced. The increase is uniform every week and when a flock of birds shows a normal condition there is no necessity for using artificial light, regardless of the season of the year.

When production shows a tendency to drop off each week rather than advance, however, it is a good practice to use some artificial light. One hour of light each day in addition to normal daylight is sufficient. This rule applies to all birds, whether they were hatched early and came into production in early fall or whether they were late hatched and are coming into production later.

All night lights may be used successfully with birds that fail to respond to the one-hour treatment.

Moult Can Be Avoided by Feeding Fattening Mash

When pullets come into production they frequently lay at a high rate of speed and their body weight tends to go down. A fall moult may then result.

This can be avoided, says a writer in Wallaces' Farmer, by feeding a fattening mash, consisting of 65 parts or ground yellow corn, 30 parts of ground oats or middlings and five parts of dried milk, either early in the morning or at noon. If liquid milk is available, the mash may be moistened with it rather than using the dry milk.

Since the use of fattening mash tends to cut down the consumption of the laying mash, the amount fed should never exceed two pounds per hundred birds. Feed only the amount the hens will clean up in 15 to 20 minutes, the amount being increased gradually up to the maximum or as the condition of the birds might require.

Housing Leghorn Pullets

When leghorn pullets are housed it is best to keep them confined until spring. They form a strong attachment for their old roosting places and will return after several weeks in the laying house. This causes confusion on the poultry farm and makes a lot of extra work if the birds have to be gathered up and moved back to the laying house in the face of a storm. Pullets that will not roost in colony houses at night will often go into the houses and roost during the day if a strong wind is blowing. Then the trapdoors can be closed and the birds confined until night when they can easily be caught. When catching the pullets, avoid as much confusion as possible. They are sensitive birds and the poultryman who does not frighten them will find it easier to manage the flock in confinement and they will eat more laying mash and produce eggs at an earlier date than the flock that is half wild.

Eggs Broken to Test Packing

Dozens of eggs are deliberately broken every week at one packing plant. Boxes of 180 are put into a machine, jolted about and the number of broken eggs noted. Research experts there are hoping to save poultry farmers hundreds of pounds a year in breakages of their eggs in transport. "The 'smashing machine' was devised so that data could be collected about the resistance of different types of containers," an official said.

Poultry Notes

Palatable mashes are consumed eagerly.

Turkeys when ready for market are usually twenty-six weeks old.

Three and a half to four square feet of floor space is needed per bird in the house.

Poultry houses need storm windows and storm doors, just as dwellings for humans do.

Changes of feed or the method of feeding must be avoided as far as possible while birds are in heavy production.

Birds that molt in late fall or early winter are always the best producers and breeding hens should be selected from them.

Give the growing birds plenty of water and plenty of shade on clean ground along with a good ration of mash and grain and good pullets should be the result.

Minus his trousers, W. H. Westphal arrived in Brownsville, Texas, the other day by train from Chicago in charge of a sheriff's deputy to face a charge of disposing of mortgaged property. The officer, Will Cabler, said Westphal's wife took her husband's trousers, believing Cabler would be "too embarrassed" to travel with a trouserless prisoner, but "that is where she was wrong."

"I wasn't embarrassed a bit—because I sat on the seat behind him," Cabler explained. "The passengers snickered a bit, but it didn't bother me. I felt sorry for Westphal in St. Louis, because we had to walk about four blocks to change trains. It was almost freezing and the wind was blowing strong."

INQUIRING REPORTER

What is your Favorite Study? Why?

Arlene Kraus—My favorite study this year is English, taught by Miss Galbreth. I like this subject because in English we are told to read so many books every six weeks. My greatest hobby is reading books and magazines.

Evert Barz—My favorite subject is Business Arithmetic because it is the only one I know anything about. It is the review of the arithmetic that we had in the grades. Our teacher is Mr. Hunter.

Leo Brinkman — My favorite study is English Literature. This is my choice because I like to study about English writers, and playwrights, especially Shakespeare. There is some satisfaction in it when you really do it. I worked quite hard on my English theme this six weeks. I sweat for three days trying to write it and racked by brain for a week to think of something to write.

Lorene Spitler—Biology is my favorite subject. At the first of the year I was quite sure I didn't like it, but I soon changed my mind My first idea was that we would study bugs, but I got a big surprise. We study about insects, animals, plants and the human body. I like this study because I discover some of the most surprising facts. We have a lot of interesting discussions in class, too. Just because I choose Biology is no reason that I don't like the rest of the subjects for I like them all very well.

Stella Barz—My favorite subject in high school is Algebra. I think why I like it so well is because it is just after our freshman study in the morning. In the morning I can remember better so I can remember my Algebra. One reason I like it so well is because in country school I always liked arithmetic. Algebra will always be my favorite subject. After this I will let no more reporter's stuff me. —Stella Barz

What Does Thanksgiving Day Mean To You?

Author Unknown—Thanksgiving Day is a day of rest and worship & you should stop to thank God for all the things he does for you every day of your life, and you should thank him for the food that you will eat that day.

Thanksgiving also means that you will get many good things to eat which you do not get other days and that you will get to see many of your relatives, some of whom you do not get to see very often.

This holiday is one of the first I look forward to; it is next to Christmas in value to me.

Harold Wicks—Thanksgiving does mean something to me and again it doesn't. This is why: What could I do on Thanksgiving that I cannot do any other day? The only thing is that I get a big portion of roast turkey or goose, and a few extras. The best thing of all is I don't have to go to school on that day. It would be better if there were about ten Thanksgiving days, but only having one is hardly enough to interest me. Another thing is I never get to sleep any longer.

Anonymous—When Thanksgiving rolls around each year, it means vacation from our school duties. On Thanksgiving Day we can stuff ourselves with turkey, dressing, cranberries and other things which go with Thanksgiving Day. On the day we should also be thankful for the things we have.

Virgil Stille—Thanksgiving! Say don't mention it. I can just see myself spending all day Wednesday catching the goose, chopping wood and a thousand other things that the women think must be done. But the worst is yet to come. Thursday can't you just see me carrying water freezing ice cream, carrying wood and then listening to the women chatter and the men brag. I try my best to keep the howling babies quiet. Now, I would gladly stand all this if they would honor me by letting me eat at the first table, but "No, you better wait, Virgil." Still Thansgiving is one day when I'm glad to be alive.

EDITORIALS

Last week started a new six weeks and some of us hope we can make it a better one. Those who received all A's or B's needn't worry about making it much better, but they have a standard to live up to and we hope they can do it. However for those of us who could draw down nothing better than C's or even worse, there is a goal to attain. We should look forward to making this six week's report card look as if we had worked a little, and not as if we had loafed a lot. To some of us it is easy to bring our grades up to par, but to some it is not. Those who find it hard may study more than anyone else and still not get out of their studying what a person who finds things easy will get out of merely running through something a time or two. However the majority of us can raise our grades or keep them up if we will put forth a little effort, and not try to just pass as some of us have been known to do. L.E.K.

National Book Week

The past week was national book week and should be recognized by everyone. Every year there are new books out and we believe it would be a good idea to pick out the better ones and read them. Besides these new books there is an inexhaustible supply of old ones. This year we are paying especial attention to Mark Twain's books as this is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the great American humorist. Some of Twain's best known books are "Tom Sawyer" "Huckleberry Finn" and "Innocents Abroad." Other books we would recommend are these: "The Magnificent Obsession," "As The Earth Turns," "K" and "Will Rogers." All of us, we believe, would benefit by reading a lot of the right kind of books. And by the way, we could all read more if some of the books that have been taken out were returned. You see, our library can't be locked, and sometimes people take out the books, but forget to check them with the librarian. Therefore books are sometimes lost. One book was brought back the other day that had been out since 1931. —L. E. K.

THUMBNAIL BIOGRAPHIES

This week we have two fair lassies who started out on their career about the same time this issue of the Squealer comes out.

Miss Arlene Kraus was born December 4, 1918. She is being educated in the Klemme Public school. She graduated from the eighth grade in 1933 and continued on to high school. She is called "Kraus" most of the time but very often it is "Mouse." One of her greatest ambitions is when she graduates from high school to go to college to take up music.

— Wilma Swalve

On December 6, 1921, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Spitler were rejoicing over the arrival of a fat baby girl. Little Miss Irene received her eight years of education at Liberty No. 7. She graduated from that school in May 1934 and entered Klemme High School in September. She is now a sophomore. Irene's big ambition is to finish High School and become a kindergarten \ teacher. Whether she will get to do this is more than I know. Good luck, Irene.

—Violet Schaefer

It seems that we have left out a person whose biography should have been in another issue. The reason for this was that we didn't know before when his birthday was.

Mr. Hunter was born at Charter Oak, Iowa. He graduated from the Charter Oak high school in 1923. He then attended Morningside college during the four years of 1923 to 1927 He took his graduate work at the University of Iowa.

From 1927 to 1931 he was coach and principal at the Verona Consolidated High School, and for the last five years he has been superintendent of the Klemme schools.

Mr. Hunter is returning next year to the old farm home where he spent his boyhood days. He is at present very proud of a beautiful team of iron gray horses that he has purchased. Good luck, Mr. Hunter. —Graydon Block

JUNIOR PROGRAM

FLASH! KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL JUNIORS WORKING ON 3 ONE-ACT PLAYS AND SPECIALTY NUMBERS DIRECTED BY MISS GALBRETH!

Now, my friends, we would like to have you to arrange all of your engagements so that you will have Wednesday, December 18 free to come to our program. You can't afford to miss it.

—Nora Wellemeyer

DO YOU KNOW

Do you know why barber poles are painted red, white and blue? Answer in next weeks Squealer.

Answer to last week's question: As far as we were able to determine from the records Leo Brinkman was the first freshman ever to receive a letter for athletics in Klemme High. However, it seems to us that Clarence Lemke was awarded a letter in his freshman year. There may be others. If you know of them lets hear from you.

CLASS NEWS

Freshman

Each girl is preparing one of the menus that she planned last week. She must do this alone, as she has carefully worked out a plan for preparing the meal, as well as the cost of the menu per person and the correct method of serving each food. The menu is prepared for a small family. Those girls who are not preparing meals are studying some simple art principles so that they will be capable of using good taste in giving a tea for their mothers. The girls are giving the tea near Thanksgiving. They are inviting all the mothers.

In Algebra we are studying the different graphs. So far we have studied the circle, bar, broken line graph, and the curved line graph.

In English we are starting in new books, "Minimum Essentials of Correct Writing." The lessons are not hard yet, but as some of the sophomores tell me, they are not so easy in the part of the book where they are studing.

—Marva Jean Bredlow

In general science we have finished unit five in our books. This is on "Understanding and Using Heat." Thursday, Friday and Monday we took tests in our text book. We are now studying "How Weather and Climate Affect Us."

The girls in home economics this week have been reading things out of reference books on "How to Plan Better Meal." The things they learn in this way will help them to prepare our meals better.

Next week each of the girls is going to prepare a luncheon. We hope none of them get sick.

In English we are beginning our study in the little green books. Now we are having English in room 2 instead of room 1, it seems to be a little better.

Our Manual Training boys are making end tables, magazine racks and corner shelves. The boys also feel pretty good because they beat the eighth grade in basketball.

— Reuben Grosshuesch

Sophomore

The sophomore English class read "The Pit and the Pendulum We found it to be very interesting. It was written by Edgr Allan Poe.

We had our six weeks tests last week. Most of them weren't so hard but sometimes the questions were "catchy."

Every Friday in World History we have current events. It is interesting to listen to all the members of the class.

Last week we had just three days of school because of Thanksgiving Day and that meant no school Friday.

In geometry we are studying congruent figures and in biology we are studying about different leaves

In English we wrote mysterious stories or else fairy tales. We have been reading "The Pit and the Pendulem" by Edgar Allan Poe.

In World History we are studying the Eighteenth Century.

In field crops the boys of the Sophomore and Junior classes have studied about grasses and legumes for the last six weeks. They wrote out a six weeks test Monday.

—Avis Barz

Junior

We have started to study about the Civil War this week and I think this will be a very interesting study. This last week was also six week test. Earl set a high standard for the rest of the class by getting a 100.

Our English class finished reviewing the poem Evangeline this week and had a test over it. We also had a test over the six weeks work Wednesday.

We had a test in typing Thursday and Friday. We also started speed and accuracy this week.

Our class had a test Thursday in business arithmetic and most of us did not get a passing grade, because the test was not so easy.

You should have seen the disappointed faces among us girls when Mr. Hunter said, "If you boys want to go hunting pheasants Wednesday afternoon bring an excuse from home before you go." Evidently he doesn't know some of us enjoy the same sport. —Harriet Gibbs

In history we have been studying about the Civil War, and about one of the best presidents the United States ever had—Abraham Lincoln.

We have been working on profit and loss problems in business arithmetic.

In English we have been working on the plays which we are going to give December 18.

In typing we are still working for accuracy. We have made charts upon which we keep our daily grades to show whether or not we are improving any.

—Velda Schaefer

Senior

We seniors feel as though we are being rushed a little in English Literature. For a part of our six weeks test we have the choice of writing a 1000 word theme on "Bill Shakespeare" or on "The Theatres in Shakespeare's Time." Lets go on a strike, seniors. How about it?

In biology we have finished the "Biology of Animal Life" and are taking up the "Biology of Plant Life."

We seniors are usually guilty of taking our physics books with us to other classes. Physics test is Friday. Be sure to have your experiment in by 4 p. m.

We are all rejoicing because six weeks tests are over, but we will probably quit rejoicing when some of us see our report cards.

In English Literature we had to write a thousand word theme on either "Shakespeare" or on the "Theatre of his time." (We didn't bother to count the words because when we got tired of writing we thought that we had a thousand or more).

In Physics we are studying about the expansion of heat but we will probably hear more about Mr. Hunter's new V-8 for awhile.

We are rapidly progressing in Business Arithmetic. We hate to think that there are only six more weeks of it and we'll have to plow through some hard advanced Algebra.

—Gladys Meinders

Grades 1 and 2

Peggy Lou and Dean Roths brought treats to school on Friday in honor of their birthdays.

Ruth, LaVonne and Ronald had perfect scores in spelling on Friday.

The Brownies are reading their new books: More Dick and Jane stories.

Miss Azeltine gave us three gold fish. We like them very much.

We have our new chairs in our room.

We have been studying about Pilgrims in our Language class. We have learned many new and interesting things about these people.

The first grade are making a Pilgrim sandtable and the second grade planned and are drawing ten pictures for a Pilgrim movie.

Second graders are choosing Thanksgiving stories to read next week.

Grades 3 and 4

The following people have perfect spelling scores for this week: Lawrence Bock, Barbara Johnson, Eunice Larson, Robert Reed, Edward Barz, Junior Buntenbach, Ewald Grosshuesch, Emily Johnson, Patricia Kudje, Duard Lewis.

The third grade dramatized the story of "Hok Lee and the Dwarfs" for the primary room one day last week.

Fourth grade have written the story of the Pilgrims and are making scenes of it for a movie.

Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Merkel were afternoon visitors in our room on Thursday.

The third grade Language class wrote an original story about an Indian Papoose. The name of the story is "Little Star." They are sending it to the third grade of the Harcourt, Iowa, school, to enjoy also.

Thursday we played the Rhythm Band in Music class. We enjoyed it very much.

We have six new chairs or our room. We like them very much.

Miss Azeltine brought a bowl of goldfish for the library table.

OLD GUARD ASSAILED
By WILLIAM E. BORAH
Senator From Idaho.

I FEEL that the Constitution affords ample power to deal with our economic problems. I should be greatly surprised to find that the vast majority of the people do not feel the same way. But those who once were in a position to exercise these powers refused to act. Why then should we expect them to act if they should be given power again?

They permitted monopolies to get control of practically our entire material wealth and to fix the prices which the people should pay. When the export debenture was offered by some of us, which in my opinion would have gone far toward avoiding the crisis in agriculture, they rejected it. The only thing proposed was to plow up every third row of cotton and thus start a program of destruction in the face of want.

As to bureaus and expenditures, they created bureaus without precedent. Heaven knows the Old Guard has little to offer in the way of a program except repentance, and no one would accept their professions.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY
By CORDELL HULL
Secretary of State.

OUR policy as a member of the community of nations should be twofold—first, to avoid being brought into a war and, second, to promote as far as possible the interests of international peace and good-will.

A virile policy tempered with prudent caution is necessary if we are to retain the respect of other nations and at the same time hold our position of influence for peace and international stability in the family of nations.

In summary, while our primary aim should be to avoid involvement in other people's difficulties and hence to lessen our chances of being drawn into a war, we should, on appropriate occasions and within reasonable bounds, use our influence toward the prevention of war and the miseries that attend and follow in its wake. For, after all, if peace obtains, problems regarding neutrality will not arise.

QUALIFIED NEUTRALITY
By BERNARD M. BARUCH
Former Chairman of War Industries Board.

I AM sufficiently crass to say that if cotton is to be sold to a country from which it may find its way into the hands of a belligerent, then America should have the right to sell that cotton unless and until every other country agrees to withhold its supply.

Look at other countries who are selling or who have sold munitions and other supplies to both Italy and Ethiopia. Why should we continue to be the great international Fat Boy, at whose stick of candy other nations take an unwelcome bite?

Selassie Not of Hebraic Descent, Godbey Asserts

Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia is neither of Hebrew nor direct royal descent, Dr. Allen Howard Godbey, archeologist and orientalist, declares. Doctor Godbey is a former professor of Duke university.

"There is no discoverable Hebraic blood in the kingdom of the 'Lion of Judah,'" he says. "The alleged marriage of the queen of Sheba and King Solomon entered the Ethiopian tradition centuries ago after an alliance of the two kingdoms. A trace of Judaism, however, is found in Ethiopia as the result of Egyptian contacts."

Fishing Fleet Conducts Funeral for Ghost Ship

The Flying Dutchman, encountered usually in the neighborhood of Cape Horn, and prophesying disaster at that most dreaded ocean corner, is the most famous of ghost ships, but now we hear that another sinister vessel has taken to appearing and disappearing in the South seas. It takes the form of a phantom launch, which haunts the fishing grounds near Chatham islands, a lonely outpost 400 miles southeast of New Zealand.

Four years ago the craft was first reported, and soon afterwards a launch in which 11 fishermen were going to a football match foundered, all being drowned. More recently a lonely fisherman claimed to have seen it; a few days later he was swept overboard to oblivion by a heavy sea. Perhaps with the idea of exorcising this grim visitant, the whole fishing fleet assembled on the approximate spot, and held a solemn funeral service. The ghostly launch is said to appear in misty weather and to travel at supernatural speed.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

League Postpones the Oil Embargo

NOVEMBER 29 had been set as the date for a meeting of the League of Nations sanctions committee to consider the impositon of an oil embargo against Italy, but Premier Laval and British Ambassador George Russell Clerk, after a conference in Paris, recommended that the session be indefinitely postponed, and this action was taken. The statesmen feared early oil sanctions would seriously aggravate the political situation, and Laval thought if he were given more time he might bring about the conciliation of the Italo-Ethiopian quarrel.

Premier Laval

There were good reasons for the uneasiness of the French and British governments. Benito Mussolini had bluntly told the world that the imposition of an oil embargo would mean war in Europe, the warning being given through his ambassador to France, Vittorio Cerruti. Furthermore, there was doubt in London and Paris concerning the ability of the United States government to prevent the shipment of oil to Italian ports. In Washington it was reported that Ambassador Augusto Rosso had discussed the matter with Secretary of State Hull, suggesting that attempts to choke off exports of oil, copper, cotton and other commercial articles did not constitute "orthodox" neutrality.

Emperor Haile Selassie made two airplane flights to the fighting fronts in Ethiopia and cheered up his forces so that their resistance to the invasion was measurably stiffened, especially in the South. The government at Addis Ababa announced that its armies had driven the Italian troops back from Gorahai, recapturing the town of Gabredarre. In the North the advance of the Italinas beyond Makale was very slight because of attacks on the supply columns and patrols, and Italian casualties were increasing, though the Ethiopian losses probably were much larger. The invaders are finding out what they were told from the beginning, that most of the occupied territory is untenable militarily.

Communists Stir Revolt In Northern Brazil

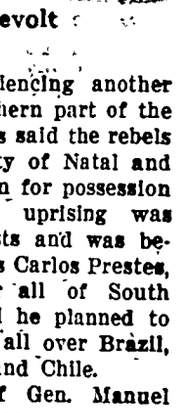
BRAZIL was experiencing another revolt, in the northern part of the country. Latest advices said the rebels had control of the city of Natal and that a hot fight was on for possession of Pernambuco. The uprising was laid to the Communists and was believed to be led by Luis Carlos Prestes, Communist leader for all of South America. It was said he planned to spread the movement all over Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay and Chile.

Under command of Gen. Manuel Rabelo, the federal troops, army and navy airplanes and two cruisers were hurriedly sent northward to combat the rebellion.

The revolt started when non-commissioned officers of the Twenty-first battalion, at Natal, began a march on the palace of the provincial governments, trying to seize Gov. Rafael Fernandez, who took refuge in the police barracks. The rebels then engaged in a battle with loyal regulars.

American Delegation for Naval Conference

ELEVEN American diplomats and naval officers, selected by Secretary of State Hull, have sailed to represent this country in the coming naval conference in London. At their head is Norman H. Davis, the President's ambassador-at-large for Europe, who participated in the preliminary conversations last year. Acting with him will be Undersecretary of State William Phillips and Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations. Advisers to the delegation will be Ray Atherton, counselor of the American embassy in London, and E. H. Dooman of the State department, who knows all about Japanese and other Far Eastern affairs.



N. H. Davis

Noel H. Field of the division of western European affairs, who attended the last naval conversations, and Samuel Reber, secretary of the American legation in Bern, Switzerland, will act as technical assistants.

The navy's four technical experts will be Capt. Royal E. Ingersol, Commander Roscoe E. Schuirmann, Lieut. Arthur D. Ayrault, and Lieut. J. R. Fulton.

David M. Key, assistant chief of the division of current information, will act as press officer for the delegation in its contacts with foreign newspaper men, and R. Allen Haden will serve as the delegation's secretary.

When the conversations in London have gone far enough to indicate what the several nations may be expected to do, President Roosevelt will direct the course to be followed by Mr. Davis and his colleagues. It is taken for granted they will strive to bring about an agreement for the limiting of future naval construction.

Federal Reserve Bulletin Notes Business Recovery

GOVERNORS of the federal reserve banks, in the bulletin of the reserve board, have sounded a most cheerful note concerning business conditions. Summing up facts gathered all over the country, they concluded that the United States was undergoing the most substantial economic recovery since the depression began, with every sign pointing to its continuance.

Business activity has been sustained for ten months near the high level it reached the first of the year, the bulletin said, "in contrast to the course of business in the three preceding years when advances were not sustained but were quickly followed by declines."

Here are some of the elements the bulletin says are contributing to this most desirable state of affairs:

Industrial activity during the first ten months of this year has been at a higher level than in any of the four preceding years, with the chief acceleration in industries producing durable goods.

Residential building has shown a "marked and sustained" increase for the first time since the decline, which in this industry began in 1928.

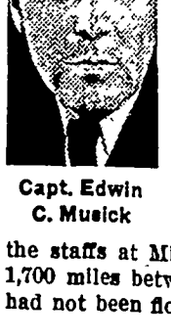
The greater industrial activity has been accompanied by increased incomes to both industrial workers and farmers, and greater distribution of commodities to consumers.

Continued ease in the money market and accumulation of a vast amount of idle money have been reflected in a revival of the capital market, resulting in security flotations in larger volume than at any time since 1930.

Profits of large corporations have increased, accompanied by a "sustained" advance in security prices, representing primarily the effect of cash buying by investors.

China Clipper Carries Air Mail to Orient

PAN-AMERICAN Airways opened a new chapter in the story of aviation when its huge China Clipper carried the first consignment of air mail from Alameda, Calif., to Manila, with stops at Honolulu, Midway islands, Wake island, and Guam. Capt. Edwin C. Musick, veteran chief pilot of the company, was in command of the craft and was aided by a crew of six men. Fourteen passengers started on the flight and twelve were dropped off to relieve the staffs at Midway and Wake. The 1,700 miles between Guam and Manila had not been flown heretofore.



Capt. Edwin C. Musick

After one or two more flights to Manila the clipper will continue to China and operate on through schedules thereafter.

The Philippine Clipper, second of Pan-American Airways' trans-Pacific air fleet, arrived at Alameda from the Atlantic coast and her crew began preparations for a flight to Manila beginning December 6. The plane flew 500 miles from San Diego in three hours 50 minutes. Previously she had flown from Miami, Fla., to Acapulco, Mexico, 1,590 miles, and Acapulco to San Diego, 1,600 miles.

Split in the American Federation of Labor

FOR a long time it has been apparent that there would be a split in the American Federation of Labor over the issue of industrial unionism versus craft unionism. That split now has occurred, and in the ranks of organized labor there is coming a great battle between the two elements. The matter was precipitated by the resignation of John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers of America, as vice president of the federation. He is the chief protagonist for unit unionization of mass production of industries, and his opponents, the craft union advocates, are led by William Green, president of the organization. The latter have had a majority in the late conventions of the federation, but Lewis has a lot of followers and is a determined fighter. He has set up separate headquarters in Washington and seven international union leaders joined him immediately. It was reported that the "rebels" had a war fund of $10,000,000. Four-fifths of this came from a special assessment of $1 each on the 4,000,000 United Mine Workers this fall.

John L. Lewis

President Green sent a stern rebuke to Lewis and those associated with him.

It is not believed that the industrial unionists will secede from the federation, but will wage a bitter fight for supremacy within that organization.

Greece Joyfully Greets Its Restored King

KING GEORGE II on his return to Athens was welcomed by the wildly enthusiastic Greeks who insisted on carrying the restored monarch on their shoulders, despite the charges of the cavalry escort. While big guns were firing salutes, George, dressed in an admiral's uniform and wearing a monocle, landed at Phaleros, the port of Athens, from the cruiser Helle, and drove to the capital in an automobile with the crown prince. There were formal ceremonies under an arch, and then a procession to the cathedral for a te deum mass. Next George drove to the royal palace and resumed the throne he abdicated in 1923 when army and navy officers drove him into exile.

Japan Drops Northern China Autonomy Move

JAPAN suddenly learned that the autonomy movement in the northern provinces of China, fostered by the Japanese army commanders, was likely to prejudice her case in the naval conference soon to open in London. Therefore the army high command in Tokyo told its subordinates on the continent to "lay off," and the ambitious schemes of Maj. Gen. Kenji Doihara came to naught, at least for the present. That plotter, who had become known as "the Lawrence of Manchuria," quietly departed from Peiping, going to Tientsin.

Kenji Doihara

Thus, for the first time in recent years, the Japanese militarists have been checked, by the Tokyo government, which informed them that the mission of the Japanese army in Manchukuo did not include intriguing for separation of the Chinese provinces and that it would not be permitted to pass south of the Great Wall without an imperial order.

Instead of the autonomy coup, the Nanking government was told by the Japanese authorities in China that it must institute reforms in the northern provinces. Akira Ariyoshi, Japanese ambassador, had a long conference with Dictator Chiang Kai-shek in Nanking, and told the press he had received assurance that the Chinese government was adequately prepared to cope with the situation in north China. Ariyoshi said he had also received assurance that Nanking desired to continue friendly relations with Japan.

At this point Yin Ju-keng, administrative commissioner of the demilitarized zone in north China, came forth with a proclamation of autonomy for the territory south of the Great Wall to within a few miles of Peiping and Tientsin, announcing that he stood for the rescue of China and close harmony with Japan. It was expected this lead might be followed by Sung Cheh-yuan, overlord of Hopei and Chahar provinces, but the attitude of other north China leaders was uncertain. Martial law was declared in Shanghaikwan, where the Great Wall dividing northern China from Manchukuo reaches the sea.

Twenty New Cardinals Named by Pope

POPE PIUS surprised the world by naming twenty new cardinals, who will be installed at a secret consistory December 16 and a public one December 19. In the group are fifteen Italians, two Frenchmen, one Argentine, one Spaniard and one Czechoslovakian. With these additions the sacred college will have sixty-nine members, the largest number in the history of the church and only one short of the full complement of thirty-nine Italians and thirty non-Italians.

The pope also named the Most Rev. Joseph C. Plagens, recently auxiliary bishop of Detroit, as bishop of the diocese of Marquette—Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara, auxiliary bishop of Philadelphia, as bishop of the Savannah diocese.

Committee Is Named to Gather G. O. P. Fund

CHAIRMAN HENRY P. FLETCHER of the Republican national committee issued a call for a meeting of the committee in Washington on December 16 to fix the time and place of the party's national convention of 1936 and to consider the apportionment of delegates. It was reported that Chicago was in the lead among the cities seeking the convention.

Mr. Fletcher also announced the appointment of a committee of sixteen prominent industrialists and lawyers to raise a big campaign fund. William B. Bell of New York, president of the American Cyanamid company, will be chairman of the committee, and Charles B. Goodspeed, assistant treasurer of the Republican national committee, Chicago lawyer, will be vice chairman. Many of the members have never before participated actively in national politics.

Death of Earl Jellicoe, Jutland Battle Figure

ANOTHER prominent figure of the World war passed with the death of Earl Jellicoe, who commanded the united British fleet in the great battle of Jutland and was severely criticized because he did not succeed in completely defeating the German fleet. Jellicoe, who entered the navy as a cadet at thirteen years of age, had a colorful career on British ships and in administrative positions throughout the world until at the end of four years as governor general of New Zealand in 1924 he practically retired from official public life.

Princeton Group Discovers Ancient Cat-Like Skull

Wyoming Strike Believed 90 Million Years Old

PRINCETON, N. J.—Discovery of the complete skull of a primitive carnivore, a flesh-eating mammal about the size of a cat, which lived in the lower paleocene epoch about ninety million years ago, has been announced by Dr. Glenn L. Jepsen, of the Princeton university department of geology.

The skull was found by the 1934 Scott Fund expedition, of which Doctor Jepsen was the field director, in the Big Horn basin of Wyoming about 25 miles northeast of Cody. With the exception of specimens uncovered by the 1935 expedition, which have not as yet been studied, it is believed that this is the only complete skull of this type which has ever been found.

Find Primate Skull.

Among the finds of this summer's expedition, which are to be studied this winter, is part of a skull of the earliest known primate, the order to which monkeys, apes, and man belong. Jaws of this species had been found by previous Scott Fund expeditions, and it was tentatively given the name Plesiolestes problematicus, but it is probable that it will be reclassified in view of the more complete information made available this year.

A total of about 200 specimens, mostly jaws and skulls from the early part of the age of mammals, were secured by this year's expedition, whose members included, in addition to Dr. Jepsen, Burchard M. Hazen of East Orange, N. J., Penn H. Holsapple of Scarsdale, N. Y., and Norman Donald of Dongan Hills, Staten Island, members of the senior class at Princeton, Thomas Gallatin of Bighorn, Wyo., a member of the junior class, William Tweedie of Bear Creek, Mont., and Edward Hogan of Sioux Falls, S. D.

New Specimens Included.

Included among the specimens obtained were several new species of Archaic mammals, including the early primates, rodents, and artiodactyls, the latter being ancestors of the modern cattle, buffaloes, antelopes, and other even-toed mammals.

The undergraduate members of the expedition will use the material as a basis for their senior theses.

Forgetting as Essential as Remembering in Modern Education

LANGHORNE, PA.—The ability to forget things is just as important as the ability to remember, Dr. Ira S. Wile of Mount Sinai hospital, New York city, told the Institute on the Exceptional Child, meeting here. Modern education will be aided by realization of this fact.

Forgetting is more than just failing to remember, he said. The forgettery is a real force just as is the negative element in an electric current. It is tied up with the emotional life of the child, and serves as an important self-protective mechanism.

The noise of a bursting shell can make a soldier forget his whole past life. So too, the child frightened by the sharp rap of a ruler or by a teacher shouting sarcastic remarks may find it impossible to remember anything or to learn new facts.

Negative directions hinder learning, Doctor Wile also pointed out. When you tell a child, "Don't do it that way," you ask him to remember the very thing he is not to do. He tries to remember what it is he is supposed to forget. Then he cannot forget it. In other words, "trying to forget" defeats itself, because the effort merely serves to keep the taboo matter in mind.

But when you unconsciously "shut your mind to a subject" your forgettery is at work, Doctor Wile indicated. The forgettery makes you put out of mind things associated with painful emotions. It also makes you discard matters that have no meaning or usefulness to you. In this way it is a real aid to education.

Wing-Bone of Flying Reptile Found in Texas

WASHINGTON.—Far south of any previously known occurrence, the broken wing-bone of an ancient flying reptile has been found in Texas. It was sent to the United States national museum here by Tom H. Wells, of Austin, and identified as probably belonging to the genus Pteranodon, by Dr. C. W. Gilmore, museum paleontologist. Pteranodon remains have not previously been reported south of western Kansas.

The discovery and identification of this hundred-million-year-old fragmentary fossil is reported in the current issue of Science.

Growing Pains in Mountains Cause Helena Quakes

Shock Recorders Placed in Federal Building

WASHINGTON. — Growing pains of the comparatively young mountains around Helena, Mont., are responsible for the scores of earthquakes that have shaken and damaged the region in central Montana where the Missouri river begins to gather water.

Earthquakes are the price paid by the crust of the earth for its evolution and progress. And in that sense the Rocky mountain region and the Pacific coast, because they are younger geologically, are more progressive and likely to give man and his buildings jolts from time to time.

Scientists have put their scientific finger upon the spot where the major shock occurred. It is 70 miles north of Helena in the Little Belt mountains, the range northeast of that city. Not particularly unusual are the scores of minor shocks that are reminding inhabitants unpleasantly of the big shake. More unusual was the foreshock, the physical premonition of the major tremor to come, for earthquakes do not always call their shots in this way.

Scientists on Scene.

Scientific shock troops were on the scene of the disaster and took up a position in the basement of Helena's federal building. Rushing from California by fast motor truck, Franklin P. Ulrich, United States coast and geodetic survey seismologist, brought two instruments and set them up to catch the dying tremors of the quake. An accelerograph and a vibration meter began writing their wavy records in order that the scientists may learn more about how the tremors occur. Passing through a snowstorm in the dash to Helena from the coast, Ulrich's truck had a minor skidding accident and United States forest service officials gave aid in getting the seismological instruments to Helena.

Many permanent seismographs miles away from Montana wrote with their pen and photographic fingers the story of the quake as telegraphed by vibrations of the earth itself. At Pasadena, St. Louis, Washington, Chicago, Tucson, Ukiah and elsewhere, as well as at Bozeman, Mont., closest seismograph to the quake, scientists read the records, turned them into code and then telegraphed them to Science Service, where the information was relayed to the United States coast and geodetic survey, Uncle Sam's agency for watching and reporting earthquakes. In this way the exact location of the center of the quake was more accurately determined in Washington than it could be in Montana.

The fault or rock cleavage in the mountains that slipped and thus set up the vibration may not be found. The actual slippage of the rocks probably occurred deep in the earth, and in this quake probably did not come to the surface of the ground as it sometimes does.

Montana's Earlier Quakes.

Montana's other important quake of recent years occurred in 1925 and was centered in the region of Lombard, south of Helena and more near the head of the same valley. At that time geological investigations caused the issuance in government reports of warnings that other fractures in the mountains were probably carrying unrelieved strains that would probably cause future earthquakes.

Earliest record of an earthquake in the region was brought back by the famous Lewis and Clark expedition, one of the white man's first penetrations into Montana. One day in 1805 an earthquake was felt and sounds like distant artillery fire or thunder were heard. In 1883 the Gallatin valley region had strong shocks, but no damage was done because there were few inhabitants.

United States coast and geodetic survey seismologists sent 500 questionnaires to postmasters and leading citizens in a wide area around Helena, asking them to give the government the benefit of their earthquake experiences. This is expected to supplement the record of instruments. The government seismologists guess that the major shock was not really as strong as the 1925 Montana quake, but that it was more localized.

Builders and architects of the region should take a lesson from the earthquake, seismologists warn. Buildings for a very few dollars extra construction cost can be made to withstand severe earthquakes.

Termite Invasion Scare Is Declared Imaginary

CHICAGO.—Danger of invasion of the northern United States by hordes of devouring termites from the tropics was declared wholly imaginary by Prof. Alfred E. Emerson, University of Chicago zoologist, who has just returned from a half-year of research in the Panama Canal zone. Prof. Emerson holds "certain interested chemical companies" responsible for the scare.

Termites do exist in this country, even in some of the northern cities, he stated; but these insects are at home in the temperate zone, and fossil records in Colorado show the presence of closely allied species 30,000,000 years ago.

HAVE UTILITY APRON FOR WORK—BERUFFLED ONE FOR HOSTESSING

AUXILIARY SPONSORS LOCAL AMATEUR HOUR SATURDAY

There will be an Amateur Hour in Klemme at the school house Saturday evening starting at eight o'clock promptly. Any person or group under eighteen years of age may give any number they desire, except tap dancing, which is barred. There will be a first and second prize awarded to the contestants. No admission will be charged for spectators, so come and enjoy the program.

Later there will be a county contest and winners will go to the district contest which will be broadcast. We asked upon what points entrants would be judged, but that will not be decided until the county meeting of officials on Thursday. The Klemme Auxiliary is sponsoring the local contest.

Auxiliary, December 12th

Auxiliary meeting will be this week Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. W. F. Pavey. Each member is asked to bring a ten cent article for the grab bag.

WEDDING HELD AT REFORMED CHURCH THIS MORNING

Miss Louise Rosendahl and Mr. Verner Priebe were united in marriage at the Reformed Church this Wednesday morning at 11:30 o'clock. A wedding dinner was served at the home of Mrs. Louise Rosendahl to immediate relatives, after the ceremony. A reception for the newlyweds will be held tonight at the Garner Opera House.

For lack of time it will be necessary for the Times to delay until next week full particulars of this happy event.

UNIQUE CHRISTMAS DISPLAY

Conrad Quandt has a Christmas display in his window which attracts more than usual attention. The display was built by Tom Blank ann depicts scenes taken from Bible stories. The display is in the form of a tower, surrounded by a fence, and inside are the Wise Men, their animals, and the Christ child in the manger. When lighted the effect is enhanced. We suggest that you stop at Quandt's to see this fine display.

SHAMROCKS AGAIN DEFEAT VENTURA FIVES

Regulars Win 32-16 Game; And Reserves Take 33-15 Victory

The Klemme Shamrocks journeyed to Ventura Tuesday evening and returned home with two more victories to their credit. Both the varsity and reserve teams got off to a slow start and did most of their scoring in the second half. The Ventura teams showed a decided improvement in their play since their performance on the local floor several weeks ago.

We wondered how Mrs. Lena Schroeder happened to travel way down to Enid, Okla., over Thanksgiving vacation. But she informs us she accompanied Miss Adela and Cleo Ingle to Enid where they spent a few days visiting with his parents. While gone they also stopped and visited with Mrs. John Ferehelm at Jefferson, Okla. She will be remembered as Liza Martin by her Klemme friends.

Thoughts--- ---At The Linotype

By ETAOIN SHRDLU

We have just a slight suspicion that a young Klemme couple had a misunderstanding about an appointment Sunday evening. Rather looks as though she was given the well-known run-around. But I'll give odds of 5 to 1 he gets another chance. Science says it's an organic disease called love.

A local business man used to wander into a local "food emporium" about 9:30 every evening. For the past several weeks, however, he hasn't arrived until 11 p. m. Guess where he spends the extra time.

We batted a thousand percent in picking last week's winners in the Seven Eagles Conference race. Hope we can do as well this week when we pick:—

KLEMME at Goodell
CRYSTAL LAKE at Hayfield
KANAWHA at Woden

Incidentally, that Klemme-Goodell game is practically a toss-up. Fans who fail to attend will miss perhaps the finest game of the season. Always traditional rivals, both schools have exceptionally fast teams this year, and the winner of Friday nights battle will have overcome a big obstacle in the Conference race.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Farley Thinks Midwest Safe for Roosevelt—Sloan Urges Industry to Save Nation—Crisis in Europe Is Approaching.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY, in his capacity of chairman of the Democratic national committee, called that body to meet in Washington January 8, when arrangements will be made for the convention of 1936 and the place of that gathering selected. He told the correspondents that the chief bidders for the convention would be Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and San Francisco, and denied the report that the first named city already had been decided upon. He said he thought the highest bidder would be selected, provided it has adequate convention hall and hotel facilities.

J. A. Farley

Stories that Senator Donahey of Ohio or some one else would be given second place on the ticket instead of Garner were laughed at by Mr. Farley. He asserted that there was no doubt about the renomination of Garner for vice president. Asked about the two-thirds rule, he said the committee might recommend its abandonment, but that any change was the business of the convention. Commenting on the Literary Digest poll, which shows a majority in the middlewest states voting against the Roosevelt New Deal, Farley said:

"So far as the poll relates to sentiment in the midwest states, like Iowa, it is 100 per cent wrong." He insisted that the President was very strong, not only in that section of the country, but in every part.

"The President will carry as many states next year as he did in 1932," said Farley. Roosevelt carried all except six states at that time. Farley said he believed Roosevelt would win the electoral vote of Pennsylvania, one of the states that voted for Hoover in 1932, and that also there was a good chance of carrying New Hampshire.

ALFRED P. SLOAN, JR., president of General Motors corporation, was the chief speaker at the annual dinner of the Congress of American Industry in New York, and he made an earnest plea to industry to save the country from bureaucracy and possible socialism.

A. P. Sloan, Jr.

Industry should lead the nation away from the fallacious theory of plenty "to promote the general welfare of all the people," Mr. Sloan told the nation's leading manufacturers. Should big business fail to accept this "broader responsibility," it will bring, he said, the "urge for more and more interference from without—government in business."

Mr. Sloan conceded the gravity and the extreme importance of problems of today—the paramount necessity of charting a sound course for the "long future." He advocated:

"1—Reduction in the real costs and selling prices of goods and services.

"2—A more economic balance of national income through policies affecting wages, hours, prices and profits."

The meeting of the congress was held in conjunction with the fortieth annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers, and the speakers before that body were as emphatic in their condemnation of the economic policies of the administration as was Mr. Sloan. President C. L. Bardo said: "Whether we like it or not, industry has been forced in sheer self-defense to enter the political arena or be destroyed as a private enterprise."

General Counsel J. A. Emery declared: "This gathering is a call to arms.

"The sentry call should rouse the armies of industry to repulse the forces of the alien theory that challenge our political institutions and economic system within our own household."

Robert L. Lund, chairman of the board, said: "The New Dealers have been forced to desert some of their boldest experiments. This has came to pass because the American people have demanded a return to common sense and sound business. American industry has taken the leadership in this combat."

PRIVATE bankers comprising the federal reserve advisory council have handed to the federal reserve board a report giving warning that unless the board acts to control credit, the country "faces dangerous inflation" and "speculation such as preceded the market collapse of 1929." The board suppressed the report but it leaked out.

Besides warning the reserve board against the dangers of credit inflation which lurk in the three billion dollars of idle bank reserves, the council disagreed bluntly with the do-nothing policy on bank reserves which has thus far been adhered to by Chairman Marriner S. Eccles and other federal reserve governors.

SANTA CLAUS is doing big work this year for the merchants of the country. It is estimated by officials of the Commerce department that the Christmas trade will amount to $4,500,000,000 or half a billion dollars more than in December last year.

Preliminary holiday trade reports from all parts of the country to the Commerce department indicated that retail trade already is running from 5 to 35 per cent higher than a year ago.

Christmas clubs will pay $312,000,000 to 7,000,000 members. Much of this money will go into Christmas trade.

EUROPEAN diplomats, especially the British and Premier Laval of France, are exceedingly clever and resourceful, but if they are to extricate their nations from the present threatening state of affairs they will need all their smartness. Though decision as to the imposition of an oil embargo against Italy was postponed until December 12 to give Laval a chance to conciliate Mussolini, the duce refused to make any gesture toward peace. Italians were authoritatively warned not to mistake diplomatic exchanges between their premier and the representatives of Great Britain and France as "peace talk," and were told there was no reason to believe Mussolini had modified his minimum terms already presented to Sir Eric Drummond and Laval's representative. Also he has declined further to conciliate Britain by removing more troops from Libya and has repeated his warning that he will consider an oil embargo an unfriendly gesture. He and all Italians are especially resentful against Great Britain, which apparently intends to insist on the oil ban. And now they are getting very sore at France, despite Laval's efforts to maintain friendly relations between the two countries. There were reports that Italian troops were being massed along the French frontier.

Sir Samuel Hoare

One more rather desperate move for peace was made in Paris when Laval gave Italian Ambassador Cerruti a "set of suggestions" which were said to be the last word from France and Great Britain before the applying of the oil embargo, due on December 12. These suggestions were said to be based principally on an exchange of territories between Italy and Ethiopia, the latter to receive its long-sought seaport and to remain absolutely independent, save for the lands granted to Italy.

The feeling in Rome was pessimistic, and there was noted a general tightening up of home defenses. Troops that had been expected to depart for the Ethiopian front were being retained in Italy, and the orders to the naval and air forces were suggestive. New economic measures to resist the sanctions were being put into effect daily.

The British government was engrossed with the troublous situation. Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, received timely orders from his physician to take a rest in Switzerland, and it was announced he would stop in Paris for a conference with Premier Laval. The admiralty was preparing for eventualities and ordered officers of the royal navy reserve to report at once for duty at Plymouth. These men have been serving as officers and engineers in the merchant marine.

GEN. HO YING-CHIN, Chinese minister of war, was sent to Peiping by Dictator Chiang Kai-shek to try to check the northern autonomy movement. Delegations from the Autonomy Promotion society called on him and mobs shouted autonomy slogans outside his office, and then the Japanese army officers took the matter in hand. Lieut. Col. Tan Takahashi, military attache at Peiping, and an officer of the Japanese garrison called on General Ho and ordered him to leave the city at once. Takahashi told the war minister: "The Japanese army is convinced your continued stay in Peiping can only complicate matters."

Ho Ying-Chin

Maj. Gen. Hayao Tada, Japanese commander in north China, said: "War between China and Japan is certain if China breaks the agreement signed last July in which Nanking agreed not to send troops into Hopei province."

At the same time Japanese war planes were flying low over Peiping.

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL sent to London the usual polite reminder that the semi-annual war debt installment from Great Britain was due on December 15. And, also as usual, the British government sent to Mr. Hull the reply that under the circumstances it wouldn't pay a cent. Well, we were not counting on getting this money for Christmas spending.

BRITISH, Irish and Canadian delegations opened conversations in Washington with American officials looking to the establishment of trans-Atlantic air mail and passenger service. It was believed this could be accomplished as soon as reciprocal pacts are signed to allow the landing of American planes on foreign soil. Heretofore this has been blocked by the jealousies of foreign aviation interests.

The delegation from Great Britain is headed by Sir Ronald Bands, director general of the general post office. He is accompanied by C. E. Woods Humphrey, managing director of Imperial Airways, Ltd.

Postmaster General Farley announced that he would ask congress at the coming session for funds to start an air-mail service between the United States and Europe.

CANADA'S wheat marketing policy, always a matter of great interest to wheat growers of the United States, is to be radically altered, according to the Dominion government. A new wheat board has been appointed, headed by James R. Murray, general manager of the Alberta Pacific Grain company. Instead of trying to maintain prices by stabilization operations on the Winnipeg Grain exchange, the board will endeavor to reduce the huge Canadian wheat surplus by offering wheat for sale at the world's competitive prices.

GOOD news for the building industry. President Green of the American Federation of Labor gives out the word that there will be no more jurisdictional strikes among construction workers. The factions in the building trades department of the federation have found a plan to prevent workmen from delaying construction by strikes over which of two organizations should do a particular piece of work.

In the future the contractor is to decide which union shall do the job when a dispute arises, and then if a joint committee of the unions involved is unable to adjust the difference the question is to be referred to a federal judge as arbiter.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE announced the corn-hog program for 1936-37. Designed to maintain a balance between the interests of the producer and the consumer, this new plan will permit a 30 per cent increase in hog production next year over 1935, thus preparing the way for possible reductions in pork prices to the housewife; and to restrict corn acreage to about 95,000,000 acres, an increase of about 1,400,000 acres, over the amount harvested this year.

Sec'y Wallace

After appraisal by community committees and review by county allotment committees, a corn acreage base and a market hog base will be fixed. Co-operating producers must agree to plant corn next year on at least 25 per cent of their base acreages. They will be permitted to retire from 10 to 30 per cent of their base acreage for soil-improving or erosion-preventing purposes. Hog growers must agree to produce between 50 and 100 per cent of the base market production.

The 1936 corn adjustment payment will be 35 cents a bushel on the appraised yield times the adjusted acreage, less the pro rata share of local administrative expenses.

Corn adjustment payments will be made in two installments. The first, at the rate of 20 a bushel, is to be made about August 1. The second will come due about December 31, 1936, at the rate of 15 cents per bushel.

A payment of $1.25 per head will be made on each hog in the base. Deductions will be made at the rate of $2.50 per head if a producer fails to raise 50 per cent of his base numbers. The total payment to a producer will be the same for a production ranging from 50 per cent to 100 per cent of his base.

The 1937 rates will be announced by November 30, 1936, but the rate on corn will not be less than 30 cents per bushel and the rate on hogs will not be less than $1.25 per head.

ONE hundred thousand Democrats, mostly Georgians, gathered in the stadium of Georgia Tech at Atlanta for a homecoming and heard President Roosevelt deliver a characteristic speech, full of confidence, assurance of prosperity and praise for what the New Deal has accomplished. And he did not neglect to attack warmly the critics of his administration. In reviewing the economic and social advances since his inauguration he gave out what was considered the keynote for his campaign for re-election, and definitely announced his candidacy—unnecessarily—by asserting that life in the United States has improved in the last two and a half years and will continue to improve "if I have anything to do with it."

President Roosevelt

Mr. Roosevelt promised that lavish government spending was over and that the nation could look forward with assurance to a decreasing deficit, and asserted that the government credit is higher than that of any other great nation. He bitterly criticized the treasury policies prior to his entrance into the White House, traced the relief policies as opposed to doles and declared that the peak of appropriations has passed.

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"Cave Man Stuff"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

I'VE got a yarn here, lads and lassies, that is just another illustration of the fact that you don't have to go to the far corners of the world to find adventure. This yarn comes to us from Donald Adams, and by golly, the adventure Don ran into is too strange to have anywhere but right here in our own amazing United States.

You'd never expect this sort of thing to happen in Darkest Africa or in Wild and Woolly Asia. It just couldn't happen in Europe.

But it did happen right in Boston, in the year 1917—and what's more, Don Adams can prove it.

Don is a carpenter, and he's done work all over New England. He hopes, though, that he never has to do another job for anybody who even remotely resembles that big stiff he ran up against in Boston.

Don will never forget his name, but relaying it on to you is a job I don't want to tackle, because that bird's monicker was about two feet long, and full of z's and k's, and neither Don nor I can pronounce it, and only two people in the whole world outside of Einstein could spell it.

More Muscles Than Letters in His Name.

The fellow, himself, was about as big as his name, and two or three times as hard to get along with. He hadn't been in this country very long and he spoke darned little English. Don Adams didn't know very much about him, but he had a carpentering job to be done, and Don went to work and did it for him.

It was a contract job, and the price agreed upon was a hundred and seventy-five dollars. Don finished it up in about three weeks, and during that time he hardly ever saw the big fellow, although his wife and eleven children were home most of the time.

When he was all through, Don gave his bill to the man's wife and left, expecting to receive his money before long.

Don waited a couple of weeks but no money came. Then he began to get short of dough and went around to the big fellow's house to see what was the matter. He rapped at the door and the big fellow himself opened it.

"What you want?" he said, as Don stepped into the hall.

This Was a Reception, but No Tea Party.

The big fellow was scowling darkly. He stood facing Don with his chin out-thrust, his arms held out from his sides in a menacing attitude. Don didn't quite know what to make of it.

"Why," he said, "I've come for my money."

Without saying a word, the big fellow picked up a chair, raised it high in the air and brought it down on Don's head. Don reeled and fell to the floor.

The chair had caught him a nasty wallop.

"If I know what is coming," says Don, "I can generally manage to take care of myself. But the thing happened so unexpectedly that I didn't have a chance. I got to my feet again, frightened and surprised. I started to call for help, and immediately the chair crashed down on me again."

"Standing Over Me With a Knife In His Hand."

This time Don tried to dodge the chair. He turned so that it missed his head but it hit him in the shoulder and knocked him down again. A sick feeling came over him but he didn't lose consciousness.

From what seemed to be a great distance away, he heard the big fellow roaring at him.

"Get out of this house," he was bellowing, "and if you ask for money again I cut your head off and burn you up in the stove."

Don struggled to rise—managed to prop himself up on one elbow.

"I looked at him," he says, "and could see him dimly, standing over me with a long curved knife in his hand. I was so overcome by fear that I thought I must surely collapse. I crawled to the door, got crazily to my feet and tried to go out the door. But the door was locked."

Don Would Have Sold His Life Cheaply.

Don looked at that door with the blank stare of a dazed man. He wouldn't have given a nickel, then, for his chances of getting out of that house alive. Then, from somewhere outside he heard some one yell:

"Wait a minute, buddy—I'll help you."

And at that point, Don collapsed and fell to the floor.

"I can't remember much after that," Don says. "Two policemen broke down the door and nabbed the big fellow, and then everything went black. The next thing I knew, I was in my own bed, with a doctor and my wife taking care of me."

For three weeks Don lay in that bed, unable to walk. When he had recovered enough so that he could hobble about a bit, he was summoned to attend the big fellow's trial.

Just Give Him Another Chance at That Guy!

And that was where the big stiff got a swell taste of justice. The judge just did a little figuring, adding up Don's bill, and his doctor's bill. Then he added some more for the suffering he had caused Don, and made the big fellow pay it.

And on top of that, he sent him to prison for a year. And Don—well—all he hopes is that if he ever runs into the big bruiser again, he has a chance to get set before the hostilities start.

It may sound unbelievable, that yarn of Don's, but it's only one of the many strange and thrilling adventures that are happening in America every day.

Irrigation Nothing New; Evidence of Use Ages Ago

Irrigation is nothing new. In the southwestern United States there are evidences of a race of people before the Mexicans, who used irrigation. Their ditches, evidence of which is still to be found, were built on the same lines that the engineers of today would use. Then in the days of the Gold Rush to California in '49, water from the streams was used to wash gold and later to irrigate gardens. The Mormons went out about that time to Utah and diverted some of the streams down the furrows of their fields. The gold seekers also carried the idea with them as they returned from California, but most credit for irrigation is given to the Mormons.

In the early days irrigation to provide moisture for hay meadows was as important as water for humans and animals. Alfalfa is intimately related to irrigation everywhere. The Monks brought this plant from Spain in the early days. The history of the small irrigation projects is that they usually paid, but the large ones went through a lot of grief. In the nature of things, the large water projects defeated their own purpose till population caught up. Small projects to irrigate gardens and meadows to supply produce and hay for the requirements of the miners and settlers were valuable. The large schemes oversupplied the market and became a glut on the market.—Montreal Herald.

Wild Species of Bananas

There are about 60 wild species of bananas, varying in many characteristics, along with some 200 cultivated varieties. The wild ones are widely distributed over tropical Africa, Asia, Australia, and many islands. They range in stature from four to forty feet. Some are without edible fruits; others are beautiful in foliage. Some leaves are green with red mid-ribs and veins. One has leaves striped with rose and white while another is blotched with irregular patches of brownish wine-color. However, the large Abyssinian type may have been the first of note, for it is represented in ancient Egyptian sculpture.—Los Angeles Times.

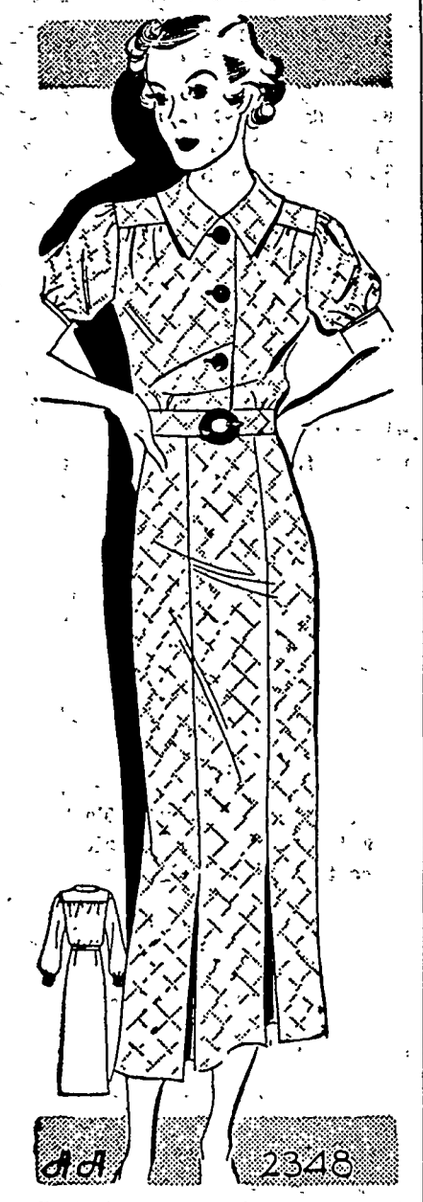
A GLEAMING SATIN SHIRTWAIST FROCK TO LEND VARIETY

PATTERN 2348



Just about now, when everyone is getting a wee bit tired of seeing the "usual" type of shirtwaist frock scattered all over town—and country too!—fashion peps us all up with delicious, cool-looking satins of every pastel hue. These satins need soft handling though. Ingenious mind and nimble fingers fashioned this one for you with soft bodice fullness, fetching puff sleeves and delightfully young collar. Long sleeves are included, for you'll want this version in your Fall wardrobe, too. If you haven't succumbed to the charm of satin, choose pastel sport silk, or novelty checked cotton. Crystal or contrasting buttons and buckle.

Pattern 2348 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 takes 3⅜ yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 243 West Seventeenth St., New York City.

Crowded Life

Life is so short that one scarcely has time to think what is the wisest thing to do.

Bright Colors Keep the Children on Safe Side

Dress children in bright-colored outer garments in wintertime for their own safety, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. While children should not play in city thoroughfares or even on country highways, because of automobiles, there are occasions when they have to cross streets or when they try to retrieve balls or other playthings from the path of traffic. They must be taught caution, but they can be further protected by dressing them in bright, conspicuous colors which motorists can see from a distance.

Children like to wear gay colors. Those of nursery-school age choose them by preference. Those a little older are governed to some extent by what others wear, so it may be necessary for mothers to get together and "create" a vogue for vivid colors in outer garments.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—Since it is only a few weeks until congress comes back to Washington for the second session of the Seventy-fourth congress, some of the problems which Persident Roosevelt must face have begun to take recognizable shape. There are any number of them, some great, some small, but that one which stands out at this writing involves the alignment shown between President Roosevelt and business interests.

Big Problems Ahead

It is a very interesting situation. Some weeks ago, the President promised business a "breathing spell." No one knew at that time how long this "breathing spell" was to last nor did anyone know exactly what it meant beyond the President's verbal statement that his New Deal program was virtually completed insofar as legislation was concerned. Through a combination of circumstances, the President's promise of a "breathing spell" for business has not only failed to placate business but at the same time has led to a determination on the part of business to go to bat with the New Deal. All of the information I have been able to gather indicates a distinct stiffening of resistance to the New Deal by all types of business interests, either corporate of individual.

There can be no doubt that a large segment of business is emphatic in its demand that New Deal spending be reduced. That section of the country's economic life is determined to force New Deal plans for spending back within the boundaries of what business interests hold to be reasonable. Having that determination, opponents of New Deal spending have at once something into which they can sink their teeth, namely, the annual government budget. In the nature of things, it and the President's annual message on the state of the Union go to congress in its first week of life. That means the country will hear at the very outset of the session something of Mr. Roosevelt's plans for further cash outlays.

The budget cannot be balanced in the next year. Consequently, the government debt, now above $30,000,000,000, will be further increased. It means, moreover, that before long there will have to be additional taxes. These increases in the tax levies probably will not come before the forthcoming session of congress but they cannot be much longer delayed because retirement of the gigantic debt is pressing even now.

The business viewpoint, of course, naturally is concerned most of all with potential tax increases. Business realizes that once the relief expenditures are cut down, common sense will demand revision of the tax structure in order that the vast amount of government bonds, notes and bills outstanding shall be liquidated in an orderly basis. So, in concentrating at this time on government spending, opponents of the New Deal actually are looking into the future and planning as far as they can to hold down the tax load they know they must carry sooner or later. It is quite obvious that there will be no change in the way of increased levies of taxes at the 1936 session of congress because, after all, political parties do not raise tax rates in an election year. But this government is due to continue as a government for this nation and the retirement of the $30,000,000,000 debt cannot be dodged.

From the White House and from Warm Springs, Ga., where the President lately took his annual Thanksgiving rest, there came announcements, both direct and inspired, that the President was turning to economy in the government outlay. The information, of an official character, indicated a desire on the part of the President to cut the ordinary expenditures of the government by $500,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936. The budget that will go to congress in the first week of January will cover the so-called ordinary expenses. On the surface it appears that this budget will aggregate about $4,000,000,000—just about the same as the budget for ordinary expenses of the government in the current 12-month period. But there has been no indication yet what the total of the extraordinary expenditures of the government will be.

Turns to Economy

We have, as you know, really two budgets. The ordinary budget is like the budget that has been used since the passage of the budget and accounting act in 1022. It covers the running expenses of all of the established governmental agencies, provides for all field work and carries appropriations for payment of interest on the government debt and a bite or two for retirement of outstanding bonds. The extraordinary expenditures under President Roosevelt's practices have been handled separately, being passed by congress in the form of a resolution for recovery and relief or some other such language making a lump appropriation.

It will be a matter then to which attention should be paid when the regular budget goes to congress and the President in his annual message gives some idea of what he proposes to spend for relief and recovery later on. The two must be taken together. Further, I believe if past practices are repeated, there will be White House requests for supplementary appropriations for the ordinary expenditures as well so that the total may not be disclosed for several months after congress meets.

Under conditions that always have prevailed, the political party in power has always avoided tearing down bureaucracy in Washington in an election year. The civil lists of the government include most of the local politicians on whom the party in power must depend in its campaign for re-election. To remove many of them means naturally the loss of power in the local communities and no political party can hope to win by tearing down its campaign machinery in that manner.

Difficult Task

Thus, Mr. Roosevelt's task appears difficult. He will be seeking economy in government outlays in an effort to satisfy and reassure business which is calling for economy. At the same time he is under the necessity of holding his political machine intact as the vehicle upon which he will seek to ride to re-election.

Besides this circumstance, there is the snarling and gnashing of business interests at the heels of the New Deal because business leaders contend the government is trying to run everything. Although the NRA is dead, there remain such things as the social security act which carries a tax on business pay rolls; the Guffey coal control law with its taxing powers, and the steady encroachment of government in business as is exemplified by the Tennessee Valley electric power project. It is no secret that business interests do not like any of these things and business has its heavy guns loaded to wreck the man who, by introducing the New Deal, must take responsibility for the government policies to which business objects.

Senator William E. Borah of Idaho his been much in the news lately. He is indulging in a sport, or a game, he takes up once each four years. The date of this activity always coincides each time with the maneuvering that precedes the selection of the Republican Presidential nominee.

Borah's Activity

Congress being in recess, very few sentors or Representatives are in Washington. When they are scattered to their homes, most of them rate very little publicity outside of their own bailiwicks. So, whether Senator Borah is in Washington or at his home in Idaho, he commands attention and hits the front page whenever he chooses to speak.

The current circumstances involving Senator Borah, therefore, are no different than those which surrounded him in previous periods when political discussions ran to Presidential nominees and party platforms, except that Senator Borah this time has commanded a little more attention and has been on the front pages with his statements to a greater extent than in previous years. This results from the situation in which the Republican party, being the minority party now, finds itself.

The woods are full of potential Republican Presidential nominees. Favorite sons are everywhere.

In the midst of all of this stands the figure, somewhat bulky, of Senator Borah. He has given every indication in the last several months: first, that he is not a candidate for the nomination; second, that he is a candidate for the nomination, and third, that he has not made up his mind. He has done all of these things well and no one knows whether he is a candidate or whether he is not a candidate or whether he has not made up his mind.

Having made quite clear that I am not informed as to Senator Borah's plans, I can fairly relate some of the things that have happened heretofore. I can recall for example that many times the Borah maneuvers have had as their objective the establishment of a political circumstance for the senator that has enabled him to exert unusual influence on the Republican national convention when it came time to write a party platform and select the party standard bearer. I believe it is fair to state that Senator Borah is a master tactician in this regard. I know that some of the old-line party wheelhorses fear him and his tactics immeasurably. I have seen evidences of that fear during the last several months and I have no doubt that there will be more of it displayed in the months to come.

Astute political observers around Washington contend that the senator's outward flirtation with the question of a Presidential candidacy is nothing more nor less than a repetition of what he has done before. They argue that Senator Borah wants to dominate the 1936 convention of the Republicans and he is laying the ground work to that end right now.

"My Empire" Wants Peace
"ME, Too," Says Selassie
Popguns for Uncle Sam
$900,000,000 More

Arthur Brisbane

England's lord high chancellor, Viscount Hailsham, read the king's speech written by the king's cabinet. The king's references to steps "urgently necessary to safeguard my empire" are recommended to the government. We haven't any "empire" exactly, but we have a republic worth defending. Some of our loose billions might be well spent in that direction.

Ignoring some Italian friction, the king went on to say "My relations with foreign powers continue friendly."

Mentioning the Italian misunderstanding, he said: "My government will continue to exert their influence in favor of peace." If it does, peace will come.

Haile Selassie, emperor of Ethiopia, sensibly asked the Patriarch Johannes, supreme authority of the Ethiopian Coptic church, to arrange peace, if he can, with Mussolini, and Abuna Cyril, high bishop of his church, is asked by Selassie to do his best.

And now comes from Universal Service the important authoritative report that Haile Selassie has agreed to give part of his territory to Italy in return for peace.

Washington says this country plans a series of Pacific ocean "Gibraltars," armed with 16-inch guns with a fighting range of 25 to 30 miles. Quite amusing, considering that the original Gibraltar has become a useless rock, thanks to airplanes and submarines. Invading airplanes might not be kind enough to come within 25 or 30 miles of those interesting fixed Gibraltars.

What this country needs for coast protection is airplanes, for fighting, and dirigibles for observation, located close enough together and high enough up in the air to make them really useful in the next war.

Uncle Sam borrows $900,000,000 more, bringing the national debt above $30,500,000,000, but $40,000,000,000 below the amount that certain "great bankers" told President Roosevelt this country could easily carry. Congressman Hamilton Fish Jr. wants President Roosevelt to tell who the great bankers were, but it is understood that they talked in confidence.

Prince Sumi of Japan, brother of the Mikado, fourth son of the late Emperor Yoshihito, takes the title "Prince Mikasa," meaning, literally, "Prince of the Three Umbrellas." The name "Three Umbrellas" is taken from a Japanese mountain and is also the much revered name of the flagship on which Admiral Togo fought the battle of the Japan sea.

"Three Umbrellas" seems appropriate—one for Japan, one for China, one for the Philippines; all Japanese.

The village of Verde Cocha, near Guayaquil, in Ecuador, exists no longer. A landslide wiped out everything, instantly killing fifty inhabitants. A slice of green mountainside, two miles wide, came roaring down, and there was no trace of the village and no man lived to tell about it.

But other men will rebuild Verde Cocha for men are as persistent as ants, that rebuild their little villages when the gardener's hose sweeps them away.

Poor China abandons hope for her northern territory and its 95,000,000 inhabitants, that Japan wants. China suspects that Japan "plans a series of blows to force the entire Chinese nation into vassalage to Tokyo." "Asia for Japan" is the Japanese motto, and Japan knows how to go about it. No signs of "fifty-two members of the League of Nations" telling Japan, "You must not."

Senator Borah of Idaho and Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr. of New York had a long talk, and reporters "guess" that Senator Borah and Mr. Fish have agreed to run side by side, Senator Borah for President, Mr. Fish for Vice President. It is not safe to "guess" about Senator Borah, but it would be wise for the Republicans to decide soon.

When experimenting starts, it keeps going. Hitler, manufacturing cannon, knows they will need "fodder," and insists on more babies. A German farmer gets a divorce because his wife wants no children.

"It is the duty of German wives to perpetuate the German blood," the court says.

Miss Edna Maria Granitsas, twenty-two-year-old member of a Massachusetts school committee, says teachers talk too much, do not let children talk enough. She says children should be encouraged to express themselves. The Massachusetts lady goes far when she says "If a child wants to yell out in class, let the child yell until he decides not to yell." Discipline is also a part of education.

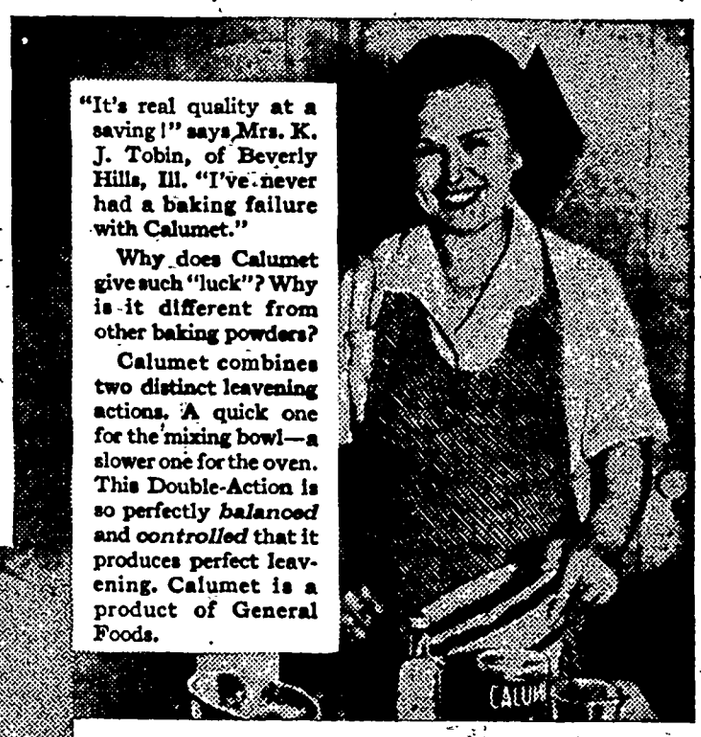
Cheers for Calumet's New 10¢ Can— and perfect, never-fail baking!

"I never have baking troubles with Calumet—and I save, too!" says Mrs. Jack Caskey, 880 Avalon St., Memphis, Tenn.

"Your new 10c can makes me feel very thrifty!" says Mrs. Nancy E. Williams, 499 Moreland Ave., Atlanta, Ga.



"It's real quality at a saving!" says Mrs. K. J. Tobin, of Beverly Hills, Ill. "I've never had a baking failure with Calumet."

Why does Calumet give such "luck"? Why is it different from other baking powders?

Calumet combines two distinct leavening actions. A quick one for the mixing bowl—a slower one for the oven. This Double-Action is so perfectly balanced and controlled that it produces perfect leavening. Calumet is a product of General Foods.

All Calumet prices are lower! Calumet is now selling at the lowest prices in its history...The regular price of the Full-Pound Can is now only 25c! And ask to see the new, big 10c can—a lot of good baking for a dime—with Calumet, the Double-Acting Baking Powder.

A Yuletide Escapade

by Helen Gaisford

TOOTS reigned supreme in the Martin household. Except at Christmas time. Then Toots was ordered from his favorite corners, and expressed his displeasure by a switch of his tail.

Toots was a big black persian, with long silky fur and wide yellow eyes. It was pleasant under the kitchen stove, where delicious odors of suet and fowl mingled in the warm air. "Get out of here, ye beast," shouted Cook, who was not quite herself during the holidays. "Sure I can't step but what you're underfoot."

Toots arched his back and withdrew to the parlor. "Never lose your temper", was his attitude. "Never sputter and scratch; express your displeasure in dignity and disdain."

Beside the fireplace were a stool and pillow which were peculiarly his own. Onto these Toots leaped, and curled up for a snooze. "Oh, no, Toots, darling," said Betty. "The tree's going there." And Toots was picked up under one arm, and his stool shoved off to a cold corner. "You must look Christmassy, too," Betty cried gayly, and twisted a red ribbon about his neck, and tied a bow. Toots squirmed indignantly.

"See, Mother? Why, Toots, don't tear it off! That's our Christmas outfit." The badge of merriment dangled just beyond his reach. Disgusted, Toots crawled under the sofa.

Now was his chance. Did he dare attack? The tree, gaudy with bells and tinsel, seemed to mock him.

Cautiously, Toots jumped up on the sofa, sniffed at an extended bough. A slight breeze stirred, and a golden bird in the branches quivered. Toots crouched and sprang.

The tree went down with a swish, and was ablaze in a moment. Toots was surprised and terrified. He clawed at the door, and howled to heaven.

His noise brought the family, and the blaze was soon put out, but not before considerable damage had been done. The tree was a heap of smoldering blackened limbs, and the wall above was badly burned.

"Look," said Bett. "It peels right off." And then she cried out, for a secret crypt had been uncovered, and the hoarded coins of some old tenant were brought to light.

Such excitement as the treasure chest was emptied! Toots sniffed it all inquisitively.

"Toots, darling," cried Betty, "you're a hero!" and squeezed him impulsively. "Just think, if we hadn't heard him crying, we might have been burned out of house and home! And Toots, you shall have a Christmas present."

The parlor was locked up, and Toots' stool and cushion moved to the kitchen underneath the table. Cook was basting the turkey. A plate of goodies was offered him, but Toots only sniffed. He was tired. He found the place under the table and clawed the pillow into shape. He twisted and turned scratched. He licked his fur into place. He settled down.

At peace with the world, Toots lay on his very own pillow and slept. From under one paw dangled a piece of red ribbon.

Mother's Christmas Story

By Alice B. Palmer

'TWAS Christmas eve and the children had gathered about the snow white Christmas tree, a glimmering mass of iridescent lights and icicles, to listen to that long-promised story of the Prince and Princess.

"Once upon a time," began Mother, "there was a tall handsome prince who loved a beautiful princess. They were to be married on Christmas eve—another Christmas eve, long ago.

"The gorgeous castle on the hillside was ablaze with Christmas lights. The Yule log was burning and crackling delightfully and the huge Christmas tree was sparkling gaily. But there were candles, tiny colored candles, children, instead of electric lights. They were lovely! Everything was most beautiful!"

"Oh, Mother," whispered little Rosebud, "I wish I was in that castle right now, looking at all the pretty things."

"Hurry up, Mother! Then what?" interrupted Danny, impatiently. "What happened next?"

"Well, the prince and princess were married and then they all sat down to the wedding feast. Let me see," mused Mother, "they were all there—all of them, my dears. Right in the center of the table stood the most wonderful wedding cake you ever saw—a gold cake frosted with silver, and because it was Christmas the whole top was decorated with lovely little bells. You see, nothing was too good for the prince and princess, for every one loved them and wanted them to be happy, and they were happy—so happy, children."

"Well, then, did they live happy forever and ever, Mother?" Rosebud wanted to know.

"Why, of course they did," shouted Danny, indignantly. "Did you ever hear of a prince and princess who did not?"

"Only a story," pondered Mother, "Would that I, too, could be made to believe that 'twas only a story."

"The prince!" wildly shouted the children, as a tall man stood in the doorway. They felt sure they had found the real prince as they clamored for explanation.

"The Prince!" Shouted the Children. A Tall Man in the Doorway.

"Oh, look, Mother!" cried Rosebud. "Look what the prince brought—toys and dolls and everything—and—and a gold cake trimmed with silver with bells on it, too, just like the one in the story."

"Oh, boy!" shouted Danny. "This is the best Christmas we ever had. Isn't it, Mother?"

Mother whispered, "Yes, dear," and then rushed into the outstretched arms of her loving husband, the really true prince who was waiting with a great big Christmas kiss. "And they all lived happily forever after," whispered Mother, through tears of Christmas joy.

Poultry

"FRESH EGGS" MAY MEAN BETTER EGGS

Poultrymen, Egg Dealers Have Improved Quality.

By R. E. Cray, Extension Specialist, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

The last five years have witnessed a vast improvement in the egg marketing facilities in many sections. There is now some encouragement for the farmers to produce high quality eggs, because they do not have to take the same price for them as the man who keeps a mongrel flock under filthy conditions and markets his eggs at infrequent intervals.

The improvements in the methods of egg marketing have followed many different lines, but in every instance it is based upon two principles: (1) paying the farmers on the basis of the quality of eggs delivered, and (2) selling eggs on a graded basis which pays a premium for that particular grade of eggs.

It is beyond the power of man to improve the quality of a fresh egg, but it is entirely within his power, through feeding and management, to produce a fine quality egg. It is also within his power greatly to improve grading and marketing practices, so as to retain the fresh egg quality until the egg reaches the consumer.

Some suggestions for producing quality eggs are: remove all roosters from the laying flock, keep the laying house clean, gather the eggs four times a day, place them immediately in a cool room, usually the cellar, grade the eggs according to size and color, and market them twice a week

Hens Confined Lay Well as Those Out on Range

Hens kept in confinement and properly fed will lay as many eggs and tend to lay larger eggs than birds of the same age on limited range. These conclusions are the outcome of experiments conducted since 1928 at the Animal Husbandry Experiment farm at Beltsville, Md.

Birds kept under confinement in these experiments were fed cod liver oil along with other feed and had access to sunshine through open windows in the laying house, thereby preventing possible adverse effects from vitamin deficiency. These hens had a tendency to lay a larger number of eggs during the winter months instead of in the spring as was the case with the hens on range. Electric lights were used in both pens from 5 a. m. until daylight each day from September until April. The fertility nor hatchability of the eggs was affected by the confinement of the hens, nor was there any noteworthy difference in mortality of the hens.

The flocks that were not confined were fed the same rations, except that cod lover oil was omitted, and were allowed to range in grass yards approximately 70 by 100 feet in size.

Housing Pullets

All pullets, whether or not mature, should be in their winter quarters in advance of the cold, frosty nights. In flocks where 5 per cent of the pullets are in production, one should move them immediately to the laying house. If the time of housing the pullets is delayed until more than 5 per cent of the pullets are in production, there is some danger of interfering with production when the pullets are transferred from the brooding quarters to the laying house. The laying house should be cleaned and thoroughly disinfected prior to moving the pullets. Furthermore, the pullets should be examined for lice and treated for same, if they are infested, in advance to placing them in their winter quarters.

Feeding the Pullets

Begin feeding the laying ration after the birds are five months old, observes a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. When the pullets' combs redden and about 10 per cent of them begin to lay it is time to put them in the laying house. Delaying too long will throw some of them into a partial molt and interfere with egg production at a time when prices are at their best. Allow 3½ to 4 feet floor space per hen.

With the Poultrymen

Provide water in abundance but not too cold or freezing.

Artificial lights provide the layers with 12 to 14 hours of feeding time.

* * *

Biddy will lay just about the same number of eggs whether it rains or shines.

Well-grown pullets are absolutely essential to profitable winter production.

A dozen eggs will average about 22 ounces. The large eggs known as the jumbo size weigh about 26 ounces to the dozen."

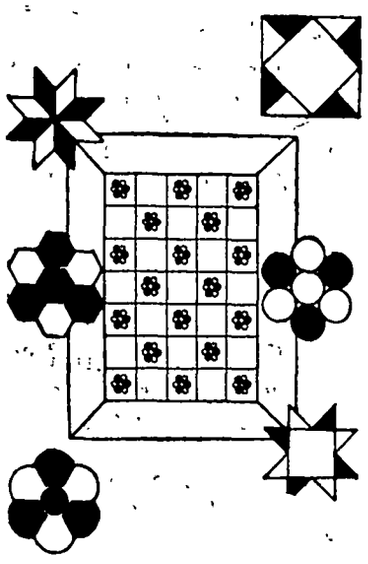
Chickens help to supply food the year round for the family, offering a good source of fresh meat in addition to the eggs.

* * *

The wrapping of eggs in cellophane should mean a great deal in quality to the consumer as well as being an important factor in dollars and cents to the packer.

Inexpensive, Easy Patchwork Quilts

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Patchwork quilts as a rule are elaborate, cost quite a bit and represent many days of tedious work. This work and cost can be cut down to a minimum as shown in the illustration. Any of these designs can be used on eighteen nine-inch blocks and so arranged to make a full size quilt. About three ounces or one yard of prints is all that is required for the patchwork. Folder No. 536 in colors illustrates four ways to assemble these different designs, also cut out diagrams for six different patches like the picture. Information about yardage required for back, border and blocks is also given.

The folder No. 536 and folder No. 0 with other quilting information will be mailed upon receipt of 10 cents, or send us 19 cents and we will send folder and sufficient beautiful patches to make up the patchwork on one of these simple quilts.

Isle Ranks High in Cleanliness

Lanai was a cattle ranch 20 years ago, but today is noted for pheasants and pineapples. Sixth island in size in the Hawiian group, its Lanai City is called the most immaculately kept American municipality in all the islands. Roofs are painted in various colors, streets are shaded by Norfolk pines and yards glow with hibiscus blooms and flowering trees.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Cakes and pies will not burn while baking if a sheet of asbestos is cut and fitted into gas stove oven.

* * *

If skins peeled from apples when making pies are boiled until soft, then strained into pie shell before putting in apples, the flavor of pie is improved.

* * *

To remove iodine that has been spilled on linen or cotton, make a paste of starch and cold water and spread over stain. Let stand until dry, then brush off.

When roasting beef have oven very hot at first to seal in juices, then reduce heat, cooking more slowly.

* * *

In arranging the table for your bridge luncheon you can get the most distinctive effect by choosing a luncheon set of that sheer cathedral linen done in pastel-tinted embroidery. They are a change from the usual type of Italian linens.

* * *

Silver and gold embroidered scarfs will not tarnish when packed away if wrapped in black paper.

ANSWERS TO THE CHRISTMAS PUZZLERS

1. This most famous of all Christmas poems was written by an American poet, Clement Clarke Moore, in 1822.

2. In ancient times, when the Saxons and Goths celebrated at a festival known as Yule, a great, flaming log was the center of the festivities. When Christianity was adopted by these peoples the log still remained the center of festivities and became known as the "Yule log."

3. Pious Saint Nicholas, the youngest bishop in the history of the church, assumed a legendary role as patron saint of all Holland schoolboys. Our Dutch ancestors brought with them to New Amsterdam the customs of their home land and forlorn and lonely English colonists eagerly borrowed tse kind'y St. Nick. The Dutch words "San Nicholas" became "Santy" or "Santa Claus" when said by little English children.

4. Dasher, Dancer, Prancer, Vixen, Comet, Cupid, Donden, Blixen.

5. Charles Dickens was the author of this delightful tory.

6. People often asociate the Pilgrims with being the first to celebrate Christmas in America. This is a mistake, for the settlers of New Amsterdam, the Dutch, were the first.

7. The gift-giving custom was nurtured in Germany. Here it became the habit to make periodic exchange of gifts among friends, relatives and acqualntances.

8. The official Santa Claus of the United States is the Postmaster General, Washington, D C.

9. Mistletoe is a small parasitic growth which appears on certain types of trees. In ancient times it was thought to have great magical properties and it was always in evidence during the holiday season.

10. Long ago the ancient Teutons celebrated the holiday season by decking a fir tree with various kinds of ornaments and fruits. From this custom has come our present use of the fir tree as a "Christmas tree"

11. The names of the three wise men were Gaspar, Melchoir and Balthazar.

12. The star of Bethlehem guided the three wise men on their search of the birthplace of the Christ child.

13. Kris Kringle is the German name given Santa Claus.

14. Christmas is not recognized as falling on the twenty-fifth of December everywhere. Several races such as the Armenians, celebrate January 6 instead.

15. Christmas is not recognized as a national holiday by the federal government. It is a holiday legally observed throughout the United States, but only by the legislation of each individual state.

Friday, December 6th, was Miss Clarice Wellemeyer's birthday and she invited the following friends in for a six o'clock dinner, which was served by Mrs. Wellemeyer. Those present were James Carlson, Mrs. Harold Shoaffstall, Mr. and Mrs. John Waddingham and son, Billy, Ethel Baack and Caris Knopp.

FINE SPORTSMANSHIP SHOWN IN GAMES AT GOODELL

As the writer saw it, the outstanding feature of the Goodell-Klemme High School basket ball games played on the Goodell court last Friday evening was the fine spirit of good sportsmanship displayed by both the players and the crowd. And that is as it should be at all times.

There has always been a keen rivalry in sports between Goodell and Klemme. In a few instances some fans became over-enthusiastic during these contests and both their remarks and actions were far from being sportsman-like. But the games at Goodell Friday night proved that keen rivalry and sportsmanship can go hand in hand and everyone can feel fine after a hard fought contest on the basket ball floor.

In Friday night's game two strong teams got together and it was nobody's game until the final whistle. In the reserve game Klemme captured the title with a slim one-point lead, while Goodell took the first string game by a ten-point margin by putting up a telling barrage of basket shooting in the last frame.

Supt. Fish, Coach Kissenger, the Goodell basketball teams and the entire crowd which saw the game are to be commended for the fine spirit of friendliness and good sportsmanship shown their visitors from Klemme.

We hope that Klemme will return the compliments in full measure when Goodell comes here on January 31 for a return game.—Editor.

LIBERTY FARMERS' UNION ELECTED OFFICERS

The monthly meeting of the Liberty local of the Farmers' Union was held the first week in December. A large number of members were present and several neighboring locals were well represented.

Election of officers was held at this meeting. The result of the election was: Lester Stille, president; Glenn Terhufen, vice president; Ruby Wacker, secretary-treasurer; Emma Wacker, chaplain.

After the business meeting a very good program was given and the lunch committee served the group an oyster supper.

The next meeting of the Liberty Local will be held at the Liberty schoolhouse No. 7, Monday evening, January 6.

GRADE TEAM BOASTS OF WINS OVER CLEAR LAKE; KANAWHA

Although we did not find it out until too late for last week's issue, it seems that the Klemme grade team, under the tutelage of Supt. Hunter, stepped out in the big time a week ago Saturday and sleped the Clear Lake graders 12 to 10. Last Wednesday they drove to Kanawha and overwhelmed that grade team 17 to 3.

Members of the Klemme team were: Wayne Buseman, Buck Trees, Donance Grange, Allen Barz, Billy Grosshuesch, Dwaine Johnson and Garland Brinkman.

Reformed Church Scene Of Beautiful Wedding Ceremony

LOUISE ROSENDAHL, VERNER PRIEBE MARRIED WEDNESDAY

Young Couple Will Make Their Home On Farm Near Klemme

On Wednesday morning, December 11, at 11:30 o'clock at the Klemme Reformed Church, Miss Louise Rosendahl became the bride of Mr. Verner Priebe. Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, pastor, performed the ceremony. The young couple were attended at the altar by Miss Mildred Theiman, bridesmaid and Mr. Earl Schuettpelz, best man.

As the wedding party took their places Miss Irene Becker played the wedding march. Other special music for the occasion was furnished by the Misses Elsie Theiman and Irene Becker who sang vocal duets and were accompanied on the piano by Miss Stella Theiman.

The bride wore blue velvet and carried a bouquet. The bridesmaid was also attired in blue. Both the groom and the best man wore the conventional dark suits.

Immediately following the church ceremony the party went to the home of Mrs. Louise Rosendahl where a wedding dinner was served for immediate relatives, Rev. and Mrs. Grosshuesch and a few friends of the newlyweds.

In the evening a large number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Verner Priebe gathered at the Garner Opera House where a dance was held in their honor.

Both of these fine young people are Klemme products. The bride is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Louise Rosendahl, while the groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Priebe. Both of these young people attended the Klemme schools and both are active workers in the Reformed Church. They will make their home on the Herman Priebe farm as Mr. and Mrs. Priebe will soon move to Klemme and retire from farm life.

Life is very much like a laundry —you get just what you put into it but you don't always recognize it.

ATTENDED FORMAL DANCE AT DRAKE U. SATURDAY

Marie Stille of Klemme, a sophomore in the College of Liberal Arts at Drake University, was among the young women of the Drake dormitory who entertained guests at a formal dance Saturday.

Guests for the evening were Coach and Mrs. V. J. Green and Dr. and Mrs. M. C. Cramer. Mark Gerlach's orchestra played. The color scheme for the decorations was blue and silver. Approximately 100 persons attended the Drake dance.

Willard Fain, of Fort Dodge, a freshman student in the College of Education at Drake was the escort of Miss Stille, who was recently pledged to Sigma Alpha Iota, professional music sorority.

AUXILIARY STAGED AMATEUR CONTEST SATURDAY NIGHT

The local Auxiliary Unit sponsored an amateur night contest at the Klemme school auditorium Saturday night, in which a number of boys and girls entered. The crowd voted and the following results placed the Little German Band, directed by "Tiny" Kluckhohn, first; The two Half-wits, Milvern Barz and "Tiny" Kluckhohn, second; and Jackie Kudje, violin soloist, third.

The first place winners will compete in the county contest at Britt on January 11th, and the county winners will compete in a district contest at Fort Dodge, January 24. The winners will then broadcast over station WHO.

METHODIST BAZAAR A SUCCESS

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church, who staged a bazaar and supper last week Wednesday report that total receipts amounted to $94.36. The supper alone brought in $45.85, while aprons, fancywork candy, grab bag, etc., brought the total to the amount stated.

Shamrocks Lose To Goodell; Garner Wins Overtime Battle

LITTLE SHAMROCKS DEFEATED GOODELL RESERVES 15-14

Local Team Weakened in Final Quarter For 35 to 25 Trimming

The Klemme Shamrocks journeyed to Goodell Friday evening and split two games with the conference rivals, the Klemme varsity losing 35 to 25, and the Reserves winning 15 to 14 in a close game.

The game between the first teams was exceedingly close for three quarters. Goodell led the first frame 7 to 6; Klemme was ahead at the half 12 to 9. Goodell again took the lead 22 to 21 in the third period In the final frame the Klemme boys seemed to tire and Goodell plays filtered through their defense with ease.

Toky Ahrenkeil tossed in eight field goals, half of them in the fatal last quarter. Brinkman, Klemm scoring ace was good for five goals during the game, while Kilgore amazed the crowd with his long "swishers" from mid-court, making 4 out of 5 attempts.

KLEMME SCORES LONE GOAL IN FIRST HALF GARNER GAME

Reserves Also Lost to Garner Seconds In 23 to 13 Game

After being held to a lone field goal and trailing 16 to 4 at half time, the Klemme Shamrocks came back to tie the score with the Garner quintet in the last few minutes of play Monday night, only to lose out in an overtime period 29 to 23.

The Shamrocks, who entered the game as top-heavy favorites to beat Garner, were unable to start clicking the first half and spotted their opponents a 16 to 4 lead. The started the third period with a bang and ran the count 21 to 15. With two minutes of play left in the game the score was tied 23 to 23 and neither team was able to count. In the overtime stanza the Klemme defense weakened and Garner scored three field goals.

The game between the reserve teams was a listless affair with the Little Shamrocks failing to display their usual dash and fire.

Roosevelt's Speech at Georgia Homecoming

ONE hundred thousand Democrats, mostly Georgians, gathered in the stadium of Georgia Tech at Atlanta for a homecoming and heard President Roosevelt deliver a characteristic speech, full of confidence, assurance of prosperity and praise for what the New Deal has accomplished. And he did not neglect to attack warmly the critics of his administration. In reviewing the economic and social advances since his inauguration he gave out what was considered the keynote for his campaign for re-election, and definitely announced his candidacy—unnecessarily—by asserting that life in the United States has improved in the last two and a half years and will continue to improve "if I have anything to do with it."

President Roosevelt

Mr. Roosevelt promised that lavish government spending was over and that the nation could look forward with assurance to a decreasing deficit, and asserted that the government credit is higher than that of any other great nation. He bitterly criticized the treasury policies prior to his entrance into the White House, traced the relief policies as opposed to doles and declared that the peak of appropriations has passed.

The President said farm income in the United States has risen since 1932 a total of nearly three billions and this additional farm income "has meant the rebirth of city business, the reopening of closed factories, the doubling of automobile production, the improvement of transportation and the giving of new employment to millions of people."

"The word 'progress,'" concluded Mr. Roosevelt, "is a better word than 'recovery', for it means not only a sound business and a sound agriculture from the material point of view, but it means, with equal importance, a sound improvement in American life as a result of continuing and forceful effort on the part of our people, and, through them, on the part of their government. I am certain that that is your purpose; and that is why I continue my confidence, my faith in the people of America."

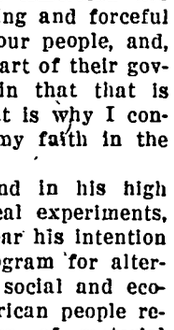
In those phrases and in his high praise of the New Deal experiments, the President made clear his intention of carrying on his program for altering and bettering the social and economic life of the American people regardless of the return of material prosperity.

Governor Talmadge of Georgia, who though a Democrat is a severe critic of the President and many of his policies, pointedly absented himself from the meeting in Atlanta, spending the day on his farm. Several days later he replied to Mr. Roosevelt's speech in a radio address.

Republican opinion of the President's address might be summarized in the remark of Harrison E. Spangler, director of the Chicago G. O. P. headquarters: "Gulliver has started his travels again and we'll all be hearing some more tall stories."

Situation in Europe Is Becoming Tenser

EUROPEAN diplomats, especially the British and Premier Laval of France, are exceedingly clever and resourceful, but if they are to extricate their nations from the present threatening state of affairs they will need all their smartness. Though decision as to the imposition of an oil embargo against Italy was postponed until December 9 to give Laval a chance to conciliate Mussolini, the duce refused to make any gesture toward peace. Italians were authoritatively warned not to mistake diplomatic exchanges between their premier and the representatives of Great Britain and France as "peace talk," and were told there was no reason to believe Mussolini had modified his minimum terms already presented to Sir Eric Drummond and Laval's representative. Also he has declined further to conciliate Britain by removing more troops from Libya and has repeated his warning that he will consider an oil embargo an unfriendly gesture. He and all Italians are especially resentful against Great Britain, which apparently intends to insist on the oil ban. And now they are getting very sore at France, despite Laval's efforts to maintain friendly relations between the two countries. There were reports that Italian troops were being massed along the French frontier.



Sir Samuel Hoare

The British government was engrossed with the troublous situation. Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, received timely orders from his physician to take a rest in Switzerland, and it was announced he would stop in Paris for a conference with Premier Laval. The admiralty was preparing for eventualities and ordered officers of the royal navy reserve to report at once for duty at Plymouth. These men have been serving as officers and engineers in the merchant marine.

All members of the League of Nations, including Italy, are exceedingly anxious to know what will be the course of the United States concerning the oil embargo.

End of Federal Relief Shifts Millions to WPA Rolls

WITH the end of November direct federal relief came to an end, and it was officially announced that 3,500,000 persons had been shifted from relief rolls to the WPA pay rolls and put to work. Other millions of employables who have been receiving the federal dole but who cannot be hired by the Works Progress administration because state quotas have been filled must be cared for by the states which will be helped by the final allotments made by the FERA before it went out of existence. As for the "unemployables," numbering perhaps 4,000,000, Aubrey Williams, assistant administrator, said the problem of their care would be solved satisfactorily.

Statistical charts on the relief situation, prepared by the research section of the FERA, were issued in pamphlet form and show that unemployment decreased about 3,000,000 in the first two years of the Roosevelt administration.

New Corn-Hog Program Announced by Wallace

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE announced the corn-hog program for 1936-37. Designed to maintain a balance between the interests of the producer and the consumer, this new plan will permit a 30 per cent increase in hog production next year over 1935, thus preparing the way for possible reductions in pork prices to the housewife; and to restrict corn acreage to about 95,000,000 acres, an increase of about 1,400,000 acres, over the amount harvested this year.

Sec'y Wallace

After appraisal by community committees and review by county allotment committees, a corn acreage base and a market hog base will be fixed. Co-operating producers must agree to plant corn next year on at least 25 per cent of their base acreages. They will be permitted to retire from 10 to 30 per cent of their base acreage for soil-improving or erosion-preventing purposes. Hog growers must agree to produce between 50 and 100 per cent of the base market production.

The 1936 corn adjustment payment will be 35 cents a bushel on the appraised yield times the adjusted acreage, less the pro rata share of local administrative expenses.

Corn adjustment payments will be made in two installments. The first, at the rate of 20 a bushel, is to be made about August 1. The second will come due about December 31, 1936, at the rate of 15 cents per bushel.

A payment of $1.25 per head will be made on each hog in the base. Deductions will be made at the rate of $2.50 per head if a producer fails to raise 50 per cent of his base numbers. The total payment to a producer will be the same for a production ranging from 50 per cent to 100 per cent of his base.

The 1937 rates will be announced by November 30, 1936, but the rate on corn will not be less than 30 cents per bushel and the rate on hogs will not be less than $1.25 per head.

President May Attend National Convention

THERE is a possibility that President Roosevelt will attend the national Democratic convention which will re-nominate him. It was reported in a Baltimore paper that he wished the convention to be held in an eastern city, and some one at the White House, when asked about this, replied:

"Maybe. The President might want to go, and he would not want to travel too far."

Philadelphia has been under consideration by Democratic leaders, it was learned, but the question of money remains a prime consideration in the choice of the host city.

Death of Dr. J. H. Breasted, Noted Orientalist

DR. JAMES HENRY BREASTED of the University of Chicago, one of the world's leading orientalists, died in New York of an illness contracted on shipboard as he was returning from a visit to research expeditions in the Near East which were under his direction. He was seventy years old. His expeditions to Egypt and eastern Asia and his excavations there added vastly to the history of civilization.

Princess Victoria, favorite sister of King George of England, died at her home in Buckinghamshire at the age of sixty-seven. She suffered from ill health through most of her life and never was married.

Amnesty for Greek Rebels Decreed by King

KING GEORGE II of Greece has decreed amnesty for the participants in the abortive revolt of last March, but he specified that "persons considered dangerous" may be confined, if necessary, to certain localities. The confiscated fortunes of the leaders were returned. The king succeeded in forming a neutral cabinet with Constantine Demerdjis, a law professor, as premier, though the friends of General Kondylis, leader in the restoration coup, were displeased.

German Pastors Rebel Against Censorship

HANS KERRL, German church dictator, has stirred up another great row by placing a censorship on the Confessional synod to prevent the pastors from sending out communications which have not received his approval. The pastors resented this hotly and adopted the course of making all announcements from their pulpits rather than in pastoral letters first submitted to Kerrl. The preachers also told their congregations frankly just what they thought of Kerrl and his orders.

War Between Japan and China Draws Nearer

DOWNRIGHT war between the Chinese armies of Dictator Chiang Kai-shek and the Japanese appeared almost certain when the autonomy movement in north China was revived in eastern Hopei and Chahar provinces by Yin Ju-keng, the administrative commissioner and friend of Japan. Leaders of the rest of the region were undecided on their course, but Japanese troops began to pour in by the trainload. Three thousand of them with full war equipment arrived in Tientsin, and the garrison at Peiping was more than doubled. The Fengtai railway junction a few miles from Peiping was seized, Colonel Takasashi, military attache, asserting this was necessary because the rolling stock was being moved south, threatening the isolation of the Japanese forces.

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek

In Nanking officials said the National government was determined to meet with force any attempt to force autonomy on the territory south of Hopei and Chahar provinces, and the executive Yuan proclaimed five sweeping reforms designed to stop the spread of the movement. Chiang was hurrying large bodies of troops to the northward.

Mississippi Valley Body Adopts Resolutions

MEETING in St. Louis, the Mississippi Valley association adopted resolutions opposing any attempt to limit the "right of water carriers to establish and maintain such port to port rates as they see fit."

The convention, which again went on record as opposing the co-ordination of transportation agencies under the interstate commerce commission, criticized I. C. C. rulings "which have the effect of permitting railroads to cut rates . . . for the purpose of killing off waterway transportation."

The delegates representing mid-continent agricultural, shipping, and industrial interests of 25 states, again opposed ratification of the St. Lawrence seaway treaty.

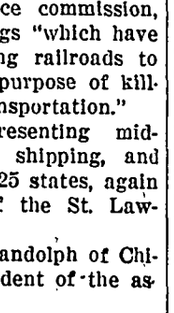
Col. Robert Isham Randolph of Chicago was elected president of the association.

New Evidence Reported in Hauptmann Case

BRUNO RICHARD HAUPTMANN'S attorneys assert that some of the Lindbergh ransom money has been found in Massachusetts and that their investigators also have discovered some pieces of evidence that are of great importance to the defense. The doomed man himself issued a statement calling on Dr. John F. Condon ("Jafsie") to "make a full confession" of what he knows concerning the kidnaping and murder of Colonel Lindbergh's little son.

Ickes Revives Dispute Over Steel Prices

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ICKES has revived the controversy between the New Dealers and the big steel corporations concerning steel prices. Mr. Ickes said there was "prima facie evidence of collusion" in identical bids on a Florida public works project. The PWA administrator said the four companies bidding $185,000 each on 3,300 tons of steel for a Miami dock—Inland, Carnegie, Jones & Laughlin, and Kalman (a Bethlehem subsidiary)—were the same that submitted identical bids on an ocean terminal at Morehead City, N. C., and the Triborough bridge in New York city.



Sec'y Ickes

In the two earlier instances German concerns underbid and were awarded the contracts. Amid protests from industry and labor Ickes then halted all additional foreign purchases and raised the differential in favor of domestic materials from 15 to 25 per cent.

There was no foreign bidder on the Miami project and Mr. Ickes said the contract would be awarded to the concern "that is farthest away and has to pay the highest freight bill—the object is to spread prosperity around."

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—Since it is only a few weeks until congress comes back to Washington for the second session of the Seventy-fourth congress, some of the problems which Persident Roosevelt must face have begun to take recognizable shape. There are any number of them, some great, some small, but that one which stands out at this writing involves the alignment shown between President Roosevelt and business interests.

Big Problems Ahead

It is a very interesting situation. Some weeks ago, the President promised business a "breathing spell." No one knew at that time how long this "breathing spell" was to last nor did anyone know exactly what it meant beyond the President's verbal statement that his New Deal program was virtually completed insofar as legislation was concerned. Through a combination of circumstances, the President's promise of a "breathing spell" for business has not only failed to placate business but at the same time has led to a determination on the part of business to go to bat with the New Deal. All of the information I have been able to gather indicates a distinct stiffening of resistance to the New Deal by all types of business interests, either corporate of individual.

There can be no doubt that a large segment of business is emphatic in its demand that New Deal spending be reduced. That section of the country's economic life is determined to force New Deal plans for spending back within the boundaries of what business interests hold to be reasonable. Having that determination, opponents of New Deal spending have at once something into which they can sink their teeth, namely, the annual government budget. In the nature of things, it and the President's annual message on the state of the Union go to congress in its first week of life. That means the country will hear at the very outset of the session something of Mr. Roosevelt's plans for further cash outlays.

The budget cannot be balanced in the next year. Consequently, the government debt, now above $30,000,000,000, will be further increased. It means, moreover, that before long there will have to be additional taxes. These increases in the tax levies probably will not come before the forthcoming session of congress but they cannot be much longer delayed because retirement of the gigantic debt is pressing even now.

The business viewpoint, of course, naturally is concerned most of all with potential tax increases. Business realizes that once the relief expenditures are cut down, common sense will demand revision of the tax structure in order that the vast amount of government bonds, notes and bills outstanding shall be liquidated in an orderly basis. So, in concentrating at this time on government spending, opponents of the New Deal actually are looking into the future and planning as far as they can to hold down the tax load they know they must carry sooner or later. It is quite obvious that there will be no change in the way of increased levies of taxes at the 1936 session of congress because, after all, political parties do not raise tax rates in an election year. But this government is due to continue as a government for this nation and the retirement of the $30,000,000,000 debt cannot be dodged.

Turns to Economy

From the White House and from Warm Springs, Ga., where the President lately took his annual Thanksgiving rest, there came announcements, both direct and inspired, that the President was turning to economy in the government outlay. The information, of an official character, indicated a desire on the part of the President to cut the ordinary expenditures of the government by $500,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936. The budget that will go to congress in the first week of January will cover the so-called ordinary expenses. On the surface it appears that this budget will aggregate about $4,000,000,000—just about the same as the budget for ordinary expenses of the government in the current 12-month period. But there has been no indication yet what the total of the extraordinary expenditures of the government will be.

We have, as you know, really two budgets. The ordinary budget is like the budget that has been used since the passage of the budget and accounting act in 1922. It covers the running expenses of all of the established governmental agencies, provides for all field work and carries appropriations for payment of interest on the government debt and a bite or two for retirement of outstanding bonds. The extraordinary expenditures under President Roosevelt's practices have been handled separately, being passed by congress in the form of a resolution for recovery and relief or some other such language making a lump appropriation.

It will be a matter then to which attention should be paid when the regular budget goes to congress and the President in his annual message gives some idea of what he proposes to spend for relief and recovery later on. The two must be taken together. Further, I believe if past practices are repeated, there will be White House requests for supplementary appropriations for the ordinary expenditures as well so that the total may not be disclosed for several months after congress meets.

Difficult Task

Under conditions that always have prevailed, the political party in power has always avoided tearing down bureaucracy in Washington in an election year. The civil lists of the government include most of the local politicians on whom the party in power must depend in its campaign for re-election. To remove many of them means naturally the loss of power in the local communities and no political party can hope to win by tearing down its campaign machinery in that manner.

Thus, Mr. Roosevelt's task appears difficult. He will be seeking economy in government outlays in an effort to satisfy and reassure business which is calling for economy. At the same time he is under the necessity of holding his political machine intact as the vehicle upon which he will seek to ride to re-election.

Besides this circumstance, there is the snarling and gnashing of business interests at the heels of the New Deal because business leaders contend the government is trying to run everything. Although the NRA is dead, there remain such things as the social security act which carries a tax on business pay rolls; the Guffey coal control law with its taxing powers, and the steady encroachment of government in business as is exemplified by the Tennessee Valley electric power project. It is no secret that business interests do not like any of these things and business has its heavy guns loaded to wreck the man who, by introducing the New Deal, must take responsibility for the government policies to which business objects.

Borah's Activity

Senator William E. Borah of Idaho his been much in the news lately. He is indulging in a sport, or a game, he takes up once each four years. The date of this activity always coincides each time with the maneuvering that precedes the selection of the Republican Presidential nominee.

Congress being in recess, very few sentors or Representatives are in Washington. When they are scattered to their homes, most of them rate very little publicity outside of their own bailiwicks. So, whether Senator Borah is in Washington or at his home in Idaho, he commands attention and hits the front page whenever he chooses to speak.

The current circumstances involving Senator Borah, therefore, are no different than those which surrounded him in previous periods when political discussions ran to Presidential nominees and party platforms, except that Senator Borah this time has commanded a little more attention and has been on the front pages with his statements to a greater extent than in previous years. This results from the situation in which the Republican party, being the minority party now, finds itself.

The woods are full of potential Republican Presidential nominees. Favorite sons are everywhere.

In the midst of all of this stands the figure, somewhat bulky, of Senator Borah. He has given every indication in the last several months: first, that he is not a candidate for the nomination; second, that he is a candidate for the nomination, and third, that he has not made up his mind. He has done all of these things well and no one knows whether he is a candidate or whether he is not a candidate or whether he has not made up his mind.

Having made quite clear that I am not informed as to Senator Borah's plans, I can fairly relate some of the things that have happened heretofore. I can recall for example that many times the Borah maneuvers have had as their objective the establishment of a political circumstance for the senator that has enabled him to exert unusual influence on the Republican national convention when it came time to write a party platform and select the party standard bearer. I believe it is fair to state that Senator Borah is a master tactician in this regard. I know that some of the old-line party wheelhorses fear him and his tactics immeasurably. I have seen evidences of that fear during the last several months and I have no doubt that there will be more of it displayed in the months to come. Astute political observers around Washington contend that the senator's outward flirtation with the question of a Presidential candidacy is nothing more nor less than a repetition of what he has done before. They argue that Senator Borah wants to dominate the 1936 convention of the Republicans and he is laying the ground work to that end right now.

GAS, GAS ALL THE TIME, CAN'T EAT OR SLEEP

"The gas on my stomach was so bad I could not eat or sleep. Even my heart hurt. A friend suggested Adlerika. The first dose I took brought me relief. Now I eat as I wish, sleep fine and never felt better."—Mrs. Jas. Fillers

Adlerika acts an BOTH upper and lower bowels while ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only. Adlerika gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old, poisonous matter that you would not believe was in your system and that has been causing gas pains, sour stomach, nervousness and headaches for months.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, reports: "In addition to intestinal cleansing, Adlerika greatly reduces bacteria and colon bacilli."

Give your stomach and bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and chronic constipation. Sold by all druggists and drug departments.

POULTRY

WATER IMPORTANT TO PRODUCE EGGS

Tests Reveal Laying Birds Must Drink Often.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Extension Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

It takes water as well as feed to produce eggs. This means that since hens have very little water storage capacity, water must be supplied at all times if the flock owner expects to take advantage of higher egg prices now in prospect.

Approximately nine pounds of water are required for each dozen eggs laid, according to records of daily water intake of 60 White Leghorn pullets over a period of four weeks.

Another significant fact brought out by the trials was that egg production increased almost in direct proportion to increased consumption of water. During the first week the hens drank approximately 2.16 pounds of water each. Egg production during the same week averaged 2.99 eggs to the hen.

During the last week of the trials water consumption averaged 3.08 pounds, or about 138 per cent of the first week's average. Egg production during the last week averaged 4.10 eggs, or approximately 140 per cent of the first week's production. These figures indicate that where the ration is adequate, plenty of drinking water will help boost the laying efficiency of hens.

The water furnished should always be clean. Where possible it is advisable to replenish the supply often so as to keep the water in the containers fresh. Fountains of fairly large capacity are the most satisfactory, especially if they are of the type that prevents the birds from contaminating the water.

Gather Eggs Often, Says College Poultry Expert

Frequent gathering of eggs is one important way of preserving egg quality, says D. C. Henderson, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college. To prevent broken eggs and dirty eggs and to prevent the first egg laid in a nest from being warmed by the body heat of other hens using the same nest, it is advisable to gather the eggs frequently during the day.

In a recent survey on this subject it was found that 64 per cent gathered their eggs twice daily, 25 per cent gathered three times daily, 7 per cent four times a day, 2 per cent once a day and 1 per cent five times a day. Where poultry was kept as part of a general farm business the eggs were gathered ordinarily twice daily, usually at noon and again at night. Those who gathered their eggs more frequently were generally the producers who specialized in the poultry business.

House Pullets Early

Fall and winter egg production may be improved by housing the pullets early. Thoroughly clean the laying house and cover the floor with straw or some other suitable litter, however, before moving the birds from the brooder house or range shelter. Numerous poultry diseases may be carried over if the laying house is not cleaned and disinfected. The house should be dry when the pullets are moved into it. Separate houses and ranges for old hens and pullets will also help to prevent the spread of disease and parasites from old birds to the young flock of pullets.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Keeping Monthly Record

All things considered, the monthly record is to be recommended over weekly, or seasonal records, says a writer in the Rural New-Yorker.

To force oneself to check up on what has been happening in each poultry flock at the end of each calender month is good business and worth doing. It is vitally important to know both good and bad points in the poultry flock performance at least that often, in order to make changes, if necessary, to stop leaks or improve weak places, or to stress stronger points.

The Minorca Breed

The Minorca breed belongs to the Mediterranean group of fowls. Some authorities claim that they were the foundation stock from which the Black Spanish have come. Edward Brown, the foremost English authority on poultry claims that a fowl known as the Castilian was the original type of all Mediterranean breeds. In Spain, he writes, it is believed that it was introduced during the time when the Moors held that country and it is often called "the Moorish fowl."

Producing Heavier Turkeys

Heavier turkeys are produced at the greatest cost per pound and usually represent 65 to 70 per cent of the total weight of the birds marketed, so this increased price for heavy tom turkeys will mean a material increase in returns to the producer. Since the last holiday season, according to an authority, the turkey market has shown a good, healthy condition, with more birds being consumed in the past year and with higher prices being paid for the birds.

Good Dairy Cows Pay Best Profit

Low Producers Money-Losers; Should Be Replaced by Better Stock.

By R. H. RUFFNER, Head Animal Husbandry Dept., North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Ten good cows are more profitable than twenty low producers. In fact, low producers are often an expense rather than a profit. A cow giving six quarts of milk a day just about pays for her feed. She pays nothing for stable rent or for the labor required for her care and milking.

But a cow giving ten quarts of milk daily will yield a net profit of $40 a year. Ten such cows will produce a clear profit of $400 a year. Cows giving more milk produce an even larger return. The exact figure will vary with local conditions, the price of milk, and the cost of feed.

Many dairymen who did not make money last year are thinking of buying high priced cows. In many instances they would do better to sell their lowest producers to raise the efficiency of their better animals.

Every dairyman should seek to develop a herd whose average production is at least 8,000 pounds of milk a year or more.

Proper feeding and management of the herd will do a great deal to stimulate milk production and keep it at a high level. And good feed, much of which can be produced at home, need not cost more than the wrong kind of feed.

Another important step in herd improvement is the breeding of cows to bulls which can transmit to their daughters a capacity for heavy milk production. As these calves mature, they may be kept in the herd while their somewhat lower producing dams are sold.

Expert Tells Why Horses' Feet Require Great Care

Horses are shod primarily to prevent the hoof from wear, although many farm horses working in fields and on dirt roads are never shod. In addition to protection, says R. B. Cooley, professor of animal husbandry at Purdue university, shoes, if calked, provide a grip on soft ground or ice, if calks are sharp. By virtue of the weight they impose shoes serve to balance and govern the stride and to accentuate the size and shape of the foot.

Hereditary transmission plays an important part with the foot of a horse. There is probably no serious defect in conformation that is transmitted with any more regularity than are small, shallow, shelly feet. Obviously, it is important to mate good footed seed stock in order that one may reasonably expect the offspring with good feet.

In a state of nature wear does not exceed growth. Even when born with good feet, most colts require their feet trimmed and leveled occasionally, more especially during their period of rapid growth. This aids in preventing the development of rather serious foot and leg malformations not easily corrected later.

Protecting Fruit Trees

The only safe way to prevent rabbits from gnawing the bark off the trunks of young fruit trees is to wrap the base of the trunks from the ground to a height of about 18 to 20 inches. Where the branches are less than 18 inches above the soil, the wrappers should include both trunk and branches to a height of about 18 to 20 inches. Various kinds of wrapping material may be used, advises a writer in the Missouri Farmer. Some of the most common are 1-inch mesh poultry wire, galvanized window screen wire, galvanized wire netting having 3 or 4 meshes to the inch, hardware cloth, old newspapers, gunny sacks torn in strips 6 to 8 inches wide, and cornstalks.

Around the Farm

Oats, barley and spring wheat furnish the better cereal straws for feeding, in the order named.

* * *

Rhodes grass from South Africa, first planted by Cecil Rhodes, is a perennial very useful in alkaline sections.

* * *

Hay, corn fodder, and even oat straw may be used in large part to reduce the cost of wintering the idle horse.

* * *

The boll weevil has been known in the cotton belt since 1892, when it first entered the United States from Mexico.

* * *

Texas plans to have 2,500,000 trees ready for planting next spring on a 300-mile shelter belt designed to reduce wind erosion.

The most intensely cultivated ground is believed to be in an area of 1,000 acres in Hertfordshire, England, which is entirely under glass.

* * *

Heavily russeted apples tend to shrivel in common storage.

Except for regular cold storage, the best place to store cabbage is in a specially-built, above-ground warehouse that is well insulated to prevent rapid changes in temperature.

* * *

Yellow corn, in addition to being an excellent source of heat and energy producing nutrients in the ration, is also valuable as a carrier of vitamin A. This vitamin is not found in white corn or in other cereals.

Just a Little Smile

The teacher was telling his class about the conquests of Alexander the Great.

"When Alexander had conquered India," he said, "what do you think he did? Do you think he gave a great feast to celebrate his triumph? No; he sat down and wept."

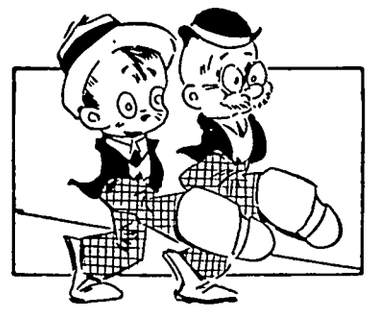
The children seemed a little disappointed at this childish exhibition on the part of the hero, so the teacher continued: "Now, why do you think Alexander wept?"

Up went a little hand.

"Well, Tommy?" said the teacher.

"Please, sir," said Tommy, hesitatingly, "perhaps he didn't know the way back."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

PLAYING THE GAME



Father—You have been running ahead of your allowance, John.

Son—I know it, dad. I've been hoping for a long time that the allowance would strengthen up enough to overtake me.

She Knew—at Six!

Little Betty was going to have her first party. The occasion was her sixth birthday.

"Now, Betty dear," said her mother, "I want you to ask anyone you like."

Betty looked thoughtful. "Then I'll ask Uncle Dick, Uncle Fred, Grandpa, Auntie Freda, and——"

"Wait a minute, Betty," she said. "They are all elderly people."

"I know," said the child, "but they have the most money."

New Expenses

"Do you find that money collected direct from government has improved your circumstances?"

"I dunno," answered Farmer Corntossel. "I'm tryin' to enjoy it. I find that evening clothes cost a heap more than overalls."

What a Relief!

"Is that Peabody, Finchley, Longworth, and Fitzgerald."

"Yes, this is Peabody, Finchley, Longworth, and Fitzgerald."

"I want to speak to Mr. Smith."—Moncton Transcript.

Two for One

Game Warden—Look here, this is a last year's hunting license.

Hunter (thinking fast)—Well, you're right, but you see I'm only shooting at birds I missed last year.

Still to Come

Billy—What you drawing, Jimmy?

Jimmy—A dog.

Billy—But where's its tail?

Jimmy—Oh, that's still in the ink bottle.

JUST GAZING AWAY

"A beautiful, clear night, isn't it?"

"Yes, all the starfish are out."

Out in the Woods

A shot is heard.

Nit—Hey, Jeff.

Wit—What do you want?

Nit—Are you all right?

Wit—Yes.

Nit—Then I guess I shot a bear!

Finished

Novice (with great determination after numerous attempts)—I'll stay here till I hit this ball.

Caddie—Weel, ye can get some ither laddie to hand yer sticks, for this is ma bath nicht.

Advancing Ideals

"How is your daughter progressing in music?"

"Well," replied Mr. Cumrox. "I think her taste is improving. She is getting so she thinks enough of some of those songs not to sing them."

Hard to Convince

"Rafferty," said Mr. Dolan, "are you wan o' those people that never know when they're whipped?"

"I am not. But I take nobody's word for it except the doctor's after I come to."

VACATION

Well, folks, it looks as if we are in for about a two weeks vacation up here where the Squealer comes from. It seems that Santa Claus is coming to town, and it also seems that everybody wants to be home when he gets here. Consequently we start loafing Saturday and we go back to work the sixth of January. During these two weeks Santa comes and goes; the old year is discarded for a new one and as everyone says a better one; and everyone eats nearly as much as on Thanksgiving. —L. E. K.

THUMBNAIL BIOGRAPHIES

Melvin Jensen was born six miles east of Klemme on Dec. 14, 1919. He started to school in Klemme where he went for two years. His parents then moved to a farm west of Klemme and of course he went with them. He graduated from the eighth grade at Liberty No. 9, and is now a junior in Klemme High When Melvin was small he was rather fat and consequently was so called. Although he is now rather slender the name still sticks. As far as I can see, Melvin likes best to shoot baskets and make wisecracks.

Novella Beier was born December 19; 1921. She went to a rural school, Liberty township, district number nine for a couple of months and then moved to Beltrami, Minn., where she went to a consolidated school. She moved back to Iowa in our vicinity and started to Klemme High School. She says one of her greatest ambitions is to finish high school, attend college, and become a teacher. Here's wishing her all the luck in the world.

—Gladys Griffen

Paul Schuldt was born on Christmas Day, 1920 in Ell township. He was educated in the Klemme grade school and graduated from the eighth grade in 1934. He continued on into high school and is now in his sophomore year. Most of us call him "Schuldtz" in school. He plays in the school band and orchestra and he plays basketball. His present ambition is to go to Chicago and work in a large factory.

—Avis Barz

ASSEMBLY TALKS

Last Monday and Tuesday, the assembly was favored by four talks, namely: "False Advertising" given by LaVonne Sherwood, "Automobile Accidents" by Pete Kilgore, "Milestones in Medicine" by Mil. vern Barz, and "The Italian and Ethiopian War" by Franklin Kluckhohn. These four speakers represented the public speaking class and their talks showed that they had given much time and preparation before presenting them. I am sure that we all received a lesson from every one of them.

—Dolorys Cook

We have been studying Milton and his works the past week in English and it is very interesting. We outlined the poems L'Allegro and Il Penseroso. The former explains the author's more cheerful moods and the latter explains his more thoughtful moods.

"QUOTES"

COMMENTS ON CURRENT TOPICS BY NATIONAL CHARACTERS

Opinions expressed in the paragraphs below are not necessarily concurred in by the editor of this newspaper.

WAR'S MENACE

By VISCOUNT CECIL

THE nations in America no less than in Europe, are preparing for fur r war. More money is at the present time being spent for armies, navies and air forces than ever before in peacetime. Moreover, one great country, in defiance of all treaty obligations, has launched a war of conquest against another. And yet the contest which finished in 1918 was a war to end war.

We are drifting toward another world catastrophe worse even than the last. Can nothing be done to prevent it? Certainly good intentions and pious aspirations are not enough. No doubt the peace-loving nations will wish to remain at peace. But we found in 1914, and you found three years later, that in spite of our wishes we were driven into war.

What happened then may—nay, will—happen again unless we take adequate steps to prevent it.

PRESENT AMERICAN ECONOMY

By SECY. HENRY A. WALLACE

THERE is as much need today for a Declaration of Independence as there was for a Declaration of Independence in 1776.

The typical New England farming community of the Eighteenth century was 95 per cent economically independent of the rest of the nation and the world. The rest of the colonies might have suddenly disappeared, and the community could continue to function. Of how many communities in America could that be said today? Merely to ask the question is to answer it. And if farmers, with the help of government, should today achieve even a 50 per cent economic self-sufficiency, as compared with their present 20 to 30 per cent, the result would be the starvation of many millions in our cities. A change of this sort might be brought about slowly, but brought about rapidly it would prove a catastrophe.

FAITH IN THE LEAGUE

By GEN. JAN SMUTS

THE league is not moribund or on its last legs, but only finding its feet, only beginning its career. Henceforth more and more it will stand forth as the determined foe of imperialism, of that spirit of aggressive expansion and annexation that characterized the old pre-war order and which was fondly thought to have been killed in the World war but is again showing its horrid head in world affairs.

No, the message of Armistice day isn't forgotten. Long live the League of Nations!

GREAT BRITAIN'S NAVY

By DAVID LLOYD GEORGE

I HAVE gone through the figures of the Admiralty and make this statement: In effective fighting force of battleships, battle cruisers and cruisers we have a more powerful fleet even than the United States and far more than any other nation. In addition, our guns are far bigger than those of any Continental power.

Pretty Actress Accuses Hard Cop of Resisting

Betty Ann Painter, pretty "Little Theater" actress, stopped by a Kansas City motorcycle officer, protested, cajoled, flattered, smiled—all to no avail. She went to the station.

"She was doing 45 miles an hour, and—" said the officer, remembering, "—resisted."

That was too much for the dainty prisoner. "Oh, no," she retorted. "You did all the resisting."

A Horrible Example

The Customer—Isn't it rather unusual to see a barber with long hair and whiskers like yours?

The Barber—Yes; but it's good business. Every man that sees how awful they look on me will fall for a haircut and shave.

Oldest Fortification in the Western Hemisphere

Cuba's Castillo de la Fuerza (the Castle of the Armed Forces) is believed to be the oldest fortification in the Western hemisphere. It stands at the foot of O'Reilly street in the oldest part of Havana. It was begun in 1538, thereby antedating Morro castle by about 50 years.

The history of La Fuerza goes back to the time of Hernando de Soto. It was there that Dona Isabel de Bobadilla, De Soto's wife, threw herself into the sea upon learning of her husband's death and his burial in the Mississippi river.

Perhaps Thief Will Save His Loot for Future Use

A Kansas City, Mo., thief is due for a surprise if he tries to dress up in one of the sample suits he stole from Mrs. L. M. Trapp's automobile. They don't button, but snap together up the back. They're specials intended for dressing the dead.

Mrs. Trapp's customers are funeral directors.

Paging Japan
Black Gold Best for War
The Mighty Airplane
Two Kinds of Treasure

When the Japanese plan to absorb a section of northern China with population of 95,000,000 seemed to have been abandoned, chaos broke loose in northern China. Industrious bandits, without fear of Japan's efficiency, began looting stores and Chinese merchants begged Japan to restore order. Eleven Japanese divisions quartered outside the Great Wall are ready to move in, and Japan will hardly have the heart to stay out under such circumstances. Later Japan will not have the heart to stay out of the Philippines. Japanese confidence in the sun goddess seems justified. The drift is Japan's way, with westerners busy planning to kill each other.

Arthur Brisbane

There are, California tells you, several kinds of gold: yellow gold that took crowds to California in 1849; another yellow gold that grows on orange, lemon and grapefruit trees; the white gold water power rolling from the mountains, to produce black gold, power and fertility, and the oil in the ground.

Mussolini's determination to keep oil flowing into Italy, even at risk of European war, shows that oil is more important in war now than yellow gold. It moves great tanks, keeps the planes in the air; it means motion, and successful motion means victory.

Mighty is the airplane in northern Brazil, where the "elbow" sticks out into the Atlantic. Soldiers said by the Associated Press to be guided by Communists decided to run the government and make it better. They locked up their officers and were just starting the new "better" government when official airplanes came along with bombs.

"Bang" went one or two bombs, aerial machine guns said "rat-tat-tat" a few times.

The revolutionary soldiers said, "That will do," and scattered in the interior. It is hard to "rise and throw off your chains" while capitalism is dropping bombs.

In Jacksonville, Fla., gentlemen fitting out an expedition to hunt for pirate treasure think they know where the gold is. They may find it; probably will not.

Other gentlemen are figuring out similar treasure expeditions in Wall street, regardless of what happened when they did that in 1929.

Men hunting pirate treasure and Wall street treasure will have plenty of excitement, and that probably is well worth the effort. "A dull life is no life."

The great Jonker diamond, biggest uncut stone on earth, is to be cut into smaller pieces, since no one rich enough to buy it now would wear so big a diamond.

It might have been sold to a Russian czar, Turkish sultan or Ethiopian emperor for use in a crown, "to increase majesty." But czars and sultans have vanished, Ethiopia's ruler is short of cash.

The big diamond will be cut into small pieces and sell for about $1,500,000. The largest "piece" will weigh 100 carats, the rest from 10 to 50 carats. Interesting opportunity for deserving Hollywood stars.

John S. Clemiengo, sixteen, sentenced to die next January in the electric chair, helped George H. Hildebrand, twenty-six, to rob and murder an old poultry farmer.

Sixteen seems rather young for an electric chair candidate, but the judge and jury felt that by disposing of the young murderer now they would avoid robberies and murders in the future. Recent history of youthful criminals makes that probable.

"Foreign observers" in Ethiopia believe that Ethiopia is fighting a lost cause; also that, as the number of wounded increases and the case looks more and more hopeless, there might be a general massacre of whites. If this should happen the "50 to 1" gentlemen of the League of Nations would have themselves to blame.

The "sanctions" and boycott will not prevent Italy defeating Ethiopia, but they do make the Ethiopian ruler overconfident, persuading him to sacrifice lives unnecessarily.

The order for steel made in Germany, to be used in New York's Triborough bridge, which would use taxpayers' money to make jobs abroad, has been canceled definitely.

So all is well that ends well, there.

The response to that piece of foolishness in the way of publicity was emphatic.

Bishops of England's Anglican church, the archbishop of Canterbury leading, denounce Chancellor Hitler's persecution of German Jews, as they well may, and they hope that Christians in Great Britain and elsewhere will "exert their influence."

Safety Congress Opens War on Dangerous Toys

Cites Many Accidents at Yuletide and Fourth

IT IS quite timely and appropriate to talk about Christmas and Fourth of July even now. At least, it is timely to talk about the thousands of children killed or badly hurt by death-dealing toys put in their hands on those festive days, for serious attention is being given to the matter.

Lewis H. Carris, managing director of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, made a strong plea for safe toys, before the National Safety congress, in Louisville, Ky.

In the grim total of 29,000 children and young people killed last year by various kinds of accidents, toys were one notable cause, he pointed out. And for every fatal accident, there are about 25 other serious accidents, making an appalling army of hurt, maimed, blinded, and disfigured children.

Compile Accident Totals.

Right now, said Mr. Carris, a staff of ten people in New York provided by the WPA is busily recording and analyzing casualties of the past Fourth of July. The American Museum of Safety is in charge of the work, and various health agencies are co-operating. And—the fireworks manufacturers themselves are financing the work. They are, said Mr. Carris, at last beginning to realize the gravity of the situation.

"Since the study is still under way," he added, "I am not at liberty to report findings officially or in detail. I understand, however, that there are already in hand reports of more than a score of persons who were killed and more than 6,000 were injured as a result of the celebration of the past Fourth of July with fireworks, firearms, and bonfires."

Many Eye Injuries.

Close to 500 cases of eye injury are included in these souvenirs of the last Fourth, Mr. Carris was told. Among these are children who have lost both eyes celebrating American independence, others with various degrees of injury to their sight, he pointed out, adding: "This is too high a price to pay for reminding our children that we once were a colony of England."

Toy manufacturers, as well as the makers of fireworks, are co-operating with safety agencies, but there is still some lack of agreement as to what are suitable toys, Mr. Carris finds.

"I have in my hand," he said, "what is called 'A Suggestive List of Toys by Age Groups,' prepared by the Toy Manufacturers of the U. S. A., Inc., which recommends, among the other things, popguns for children one and one-half years of age; 'shooting games' for children three to four years of age; air rifles and motorcycles for eight-year-olds.

"I cannot agree that these are safe toys for children of these ages."

Doctors Seek Curb on Mentally Unbalanced Leaders of Nations

LONDON. — Some great nations are today being led by men known to be mentally unbalanced. This is the charge made by Dr. H. J. Norman, president of the psychiatry section, Royal Society of Medicine, who, however, did not name names, but made his implications clear.

Already action has been taken by the Medical Association of the Netherlands, which has formed a committee to study the vital problem of curbing such unstable leaders in their tendency to urge the world toward war, Doctor Norman indicated. The group is known as the committee for war prophylaxis, medical term for war prevention.

Said Doctor Norman: "When we look about in the world we can still appreciate how applicable is the saying of the great Doctor Johnson when he pointed out 'As a madman is apt to think of himself as grown suddenly great, so he that grows suddenly great is apt to borrow a little from the madman.'

"There are at the present time individuals holding prominent positions and influencing the destinies of whole countries who are known to be mentally unstable or who have actually had attacks of mental disorder," declared Doctor Norman.

Will Man Disappear as World Advances?

LONDON.—Man's future fate is either extermination or the oblivion of having been a stepping-stone for a higher sort of being in the evolution of the future, Sir James Jeans warned here in a public lecture.

"Man's success has come to him only yesterday in the history of the earth," he said. "He had to fight wild beasts and man has not always prevailed. He must still fight for his position on earth.

"If man fails in his fight, he may be exterminated by smaller beings, perhaps even by microbes.

"If he succeeds, his capacities may gradually be extended and increased until he develops into something entirely different and possibly superior to man of the present."

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"Roar of the Blast"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU hear a lot of talk about Hades, boys and girls, but in my opinion, the place is overrated. I've seen a few places right here on earth that make the devil's well-known backyard look like the penthouse on the top floor of Paradise.

And this story from James C. Kekes is about one of them. When Jim was eighteen years old, he took a walk through that Hades and his story of the trip, which he is going to tell us today, makes him a Distinguished Adventurer—a ranking member of our club. Stand by, then, while Jim Kekes, D. A., hands it to you, hot off the griddle.

Where is Hades? Well, in October, 1918, it was at Morgan, N. J., a few miles from South Amboy. Maybe you remember how, in the last days of the World war, a hunk of concentrated Hades broke loose down there and turned the whole neighborhood upside down for a week or more. I mean the time the big munitions works went up. The explosion that shook New York, 20 miles away.

Jim Kekes was in that, right from the beginning. He was working in the shell loading plant—had just finished for the day and, with a couple of other fellows, was walking down the hill toward the highway, when suddenly he was thrown to the ground by something that felt like a terrific blow in the back.

Explosion Knocks People Down Like Tenpins.

The impact was followed by a thunderous roar and then Jim noticed that the other two fellows had been thrown to the ground too. He knew, then, even before he looked up, that an explosion had occurred in one of the many factories of the plant.

Before them, smoke was pouring from a factory near the gate. More explosions followed the first—and while the ground rocked around them, all three men were seized with an indescribable fear. The plant was built over a huge area, its several factories being spaced hundreds of yards apart. The whole yard was surrounded by a high wire fence and the only gate was the one toward which they were headed. But in order to reach that gate, they had to pass the burning factory in which explosions were occurring at the rate of two a minute.

"Well, all became panic-stricken," Jim says. "We saw guards and overtime workers coming out of the plants and running for their lives in every direction.

"My two companions, fearing they would never get through the gate alive, began to run in another direction.

Excited, Jim Runs Right Toward Death.

"But in my excitement I didn't notice them go and didn't notice that in running toward the gate I was also running straight toward the fire. The gate was between two plants—from one of which the explosions were coming. I didn't notice where I was until I found myself right between these two factories."

In fact, Jime Kekes didn't realize where he was until he was knocked down by an explosion that was almost on top of him. He found himself between those two factories just at the moment when the second one caught fire from the first and began to add its din to the turmoil. The ground between those two buildings was like a battlefield. The flames had gotten into a magazine and shells were flying in every direction—bursting all over the strip of ground on which he lay.

"I lifted myself up," Jim says, "trembling with fear, but determined to make the most of my chance—if there was a chance at all. Chills were running up and down my spine. The cold sweat had me. I was weak from fright but I pulled myself together and, with all the strength in me, I started running for the gate. It seemed as if I was being shot at from all directions. Afraid to look around me, I just kept running and running."

Running Through a Rain of Exploding Shells.

It was a quarter of a mile to the gate and Jim sprinted the distance with his eyes half shut—expecting any minute to be struck and killed. Twice in that distance he was knocked down by explosions and each time he thought he had gotten the death blow at last. But he picked himself up again and staggered on.

It took him several minutes to reach the gate but at last he was through it and out on the highway. The rain of exploding shells was almost as bad there as it had been inside but here he had a chance to jump into some sort of a vehicle and get away.

But there weren't any vehicles there when Jim got to the highway. He started running down the road afoot. He had gone about a hundred yards when he heard something coming behind him and turning, saw a heavy truck speeding in his direction.

Jim waved to the driver, but the driver paid no attention to him. He was in just as much of a hurry to get out of the neighborhood as Jim was. Then Jim stepped to the center of the road, determined to get aboard that truck if he had to jump onto the running board while it was going full speed.

The truck was almost on top of him when Jim leaped. Then—crash—Jim missed his hold and landed sprawling in the road. He rode away in that truck but it cost him a busted leg to do it. The driver stopped then, picked him up and carried him to a hospital. And it was pretty tough luck, Jim thinks, to get all the way through a quarter mile stretch of Hades, only to be taken over by a gasoline wagon.

Bank Note for a Penny; Only One in Existence

The £1,000 banknote is the highest denomination regularly issued by the Bank of England, but four with a face-value of £1,000,000 were once struck, although none of them was ever cashed. One the bank retained, and it may be seen in its interesting note library; another went to Samuel Rogers, the banker-poet, who put it in a gold frame; still another was given to Barron N. M. Rothschild; and the fourth to George IV.

But a much greater curiosity of the Bank of England's note library is a bank note for a penny, says Tit-Bits Magazine. As there is only one in existence, there is no telling to what heights its sale value would soar were it to appear in the auction room, but it is very unlikely ever to see the light of day again. It was printed and issued by accident in 1828, got into circulation, and for many years was a source of annoyance to cashiers in making up their accounts.

It is said that the bank, in desperation, offered £5 for its return, but another story says that its holder brought it to the bank and persuaded them to give five pounds for this scrap of paper with the face-value of one penny.

Inbreeding

Inbreeding is not invariably harmful. Many breeds of cattle, horses, sheep and dogs, and several species of plants and parasites, have been closely inbred and have shown no signs of degeneration. One experiment on albino rats, in which brothers and sisters were mated for 50 generations, actually improved the stock, increasing the average weight, fertility and life span of each individual.—Collier's Weekly.

Lesson for December 15

EZRA TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 7:10; Nehemiah 8:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee. Psalm 119:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Giving Thanks for God's Book.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Giving Thanks for God's Book.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Studying the Bible Together.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Bible in National Life.

This lesson is a fine illustration of the rightful place of God's Word in the life of a nation. The only cure for national ills is a return to God and obedience to his Word.

I. The Teacher's Spiritual Condition (Ezra 7:10).

He prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, to do it, and to teach Israel the statutes and judgments.

II. The Word of God Read (Neh. 8:1-3).

1. The eager assembly (v. 1). The people gathered together and requested Ezra to bring the book of the law. God had touched their hearts, creating within them a yearning for his Word.

2. A representative assembly (v. 2). God's Word should be taught to all classes—men, women, and children. The Spirit of God can speak through his Word to the whole family sitting in the same pew.

3. An appreciative assembly (v. 3). So eager were they to know God's Word that they did not get tired, although the lesson lasted for five or six hours. When people realize that God is speaking through his Word they will give attention.

III. The People's Attitude Toward God's Word (vv. 4-6).

1. Due reverence shown (vv. 4, 5). When Ezra opened the law all the people stood up out of respect for God's Word.

2. They joined heartily in prayer (v. 6). As Ezra led them in prayer they united in saying, "Amen, Amen," bowing their faces to the ground.

IV. God's Word Being Interpreted (vv. 7, 8).

The attitude of the people toward God's Word largely depends upon the minister. Proper dignity and solemnity should be manifested by the minister when reading the Holy Scriptures.

1. He stood up where the people could see him (v. 5).

2. He read distinctly (v. 8). The manner in which many read the Scriptures is greatly to their discredit.

3. He caused the people to understand (v. 8). The supreme business of the minister and teacher is to make the Word of God so plain that old and young can understand. The explanation should be clear and definite.

V. The Effect of Applying God's Word to the Life of the People (vv. 9-18).

1. Conviction of sin (v. 9). The divine method of convicting men of their sin is to have God's Word applied by the Holy Spirit. The Word of God is quick and powerful (Heb. 4:12).

2. Weeping turned into joy (vv. 10-12). When sins have been perceived and confessed there is forgiveness. Continued mourning will not atone for past sins. Furthermore, it dishonors a pardoning God and even unfits the one for present tasks. Joy has a salutary effect upon one's entire being. "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

3. Blessings were shared with others (vv. 10-12). True joy manifests itself in giving to others. Pure religion goes out to minister to the poor (James 1:27). Godliness is not content with having a good time alone.

4. The people obeyed. From the reading of the Scriptures they found that the feast of the tabernacles had long been neglected. They kept this sacred feast in a way that had not been since the days of Joshua.

5. They separated themselves from the ungodly (13:1-3). As soon as they had heard the Word of God they separated themselves from the mixed multitude.

6. The house of worship was cleared and order restored (13:4-14). No nation or people can be strong which neglects the worship of the true God.

7. The Sabbath was restored (13:15-22). Israel had long violated the Sabbath. To ignore the essential law of the Sabbath is national suicide. Unnumbered evils followed in the wake of the desecration of God's holy day.

8. God's law of marriage restored (13:23-31). Some of those who had intermarried with the heathen were brought face to face with their sin. They separated themselves from their ungodly companions. God's favor cannot be enjoyed by those who live in disobedience to his Word.

It always works

Just do what hospitals do, and the doctors insist on. Use a good liquid laxative, and aid Nature to restore clocklike regularity without strain or ill effect.

A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the real secret of relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has become. It gives the right kind of help, and right amount of help. Taking a little less each time, gives the bowels a chance to act of their own accord, until they are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin contains senna and cascara—both natural laxatives that form no habit. The action is gentle, but sure. It will relieve any sluggishness or bilious condition due to constipation without upset.

Failing of Mirror

The reason we can't see ourselves as others see us is because the mirror always holds something back.

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with anything less than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble to aid nature to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.
